D. C. Calls 125 Police To Battle Crime Wave

Brown Disputes Toll, Advocates Former Criminals Be Registered

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday denied that a "crime wave" had struck the city, but at the same time he ordered 125 extra patrolmen on night duty, an increase of approximately 50 per cent in the night patrol.

Other moves in the city-wide fight against an outbreak of holdups, robberies, housebreakings and purse snatchings included:

Senator King (Democrat), Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, joined Maj. Brown's request for an increase in the District police force.

Commissioner Hazen announced he would call a crime conference of prosecuting and high police officials.

Hazen called for more stringent vagrancy laws, and Brown recommended a law requiring registration of persons with criminal records on entering the District.

Police believed they had made an important find when a raid at a house in the 1600 block of Thirteenth street yielded seven colored men, two guns and a quantity of clothing, radios and other property believed stolen. The raid was led by Thirteenth Precinct Detective J. G. Austin, who locked up his captives for investigation.

Special Details Busy

The order for extra police on night detail was issued by Maj. Brown following an hour-long conference with six police inspectors and Detective Capt. Ira Keck. Station clerks, patrol wagon drivers and aides took the streets last night in special details from 7 p. m. to 4 midnight. This maneuver brought one-third of the privates on day shift back for five hours overtime duty.

The police superintendent pointed out that the police budget would not permit compensation for the overtime work and observed that the situation was evidence "that we are in need of additional personnel." He said he has recommended an increase of 100 men for the past several years. Last year the Commission cut the recommendation to 25 men, but this item was eliminated by the Budget Bureau.

Grand Larcenies Decline

Scoffing at reports of "this so-called crime wave," Maj. Brown released statistics covering February, 1940, as compared with the same month last year. Brown said:

"Note that the number of grand larcenies has declined from 71 to 23, while the number of robberies has increased only by five, from 87 to 92, and this with an additional day in February of this year." Housebreakings increased from 146 to 221.

He urged Congressional passage of a law providing for registration of persons with criminal records on entering the city, not with the idea of "persecution," but to aid police in their protective work.

Senator King said yesterday he was convinced that Washington needs more police. He asked Commissioner Hazen for a report on police activities and suggested a census at local penal institutions to determine the number of nonresident prisoners. "I feel that most of these crimes are being committed by transients," declared the Senator.

Confidence in Department

Immediately after King's request for a report, Commissioner Hazen said he would call a conference of all police officers above rank of captain, together with representatives of the corporation counsel and district attorney's offices.

"The parley is to determine whether our present laws are in

Tommy Corcoran Quietly Wed To Assistant, Margaret Dowd

The Tommy Corcorans receive a rabbit's foot for luck

Thomas Gardiner Corcoran, 39, President Roosevelt's "Tommy the Cork," slipped into Leesburg, Va., with a small party of friends yesterday and was married at 4 p. m. to his 27-year-old blonde assistant, Margaret "Peggy" Dowd.

The ceremony was performed in St. John's Catholic Church at Leesburg by the Rev. Father Gerard Joubert of the Dominican College, Washington.

Corcoran, special counsel in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, had long been rumored engaged to Miss Dowd, who had been his administrative assistant for 7 years and his frequent companion at Capital social functions.

Friends said they would be away from Washington for a month on a honeymoon trip that would take them to the Laurentian mountain ski country in Canada.

Farm Bureau Federation Rebuffs AAA

Members Advised Not to Participate In Friday Rallies; Politics Charged

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Partisan wooing of the farm vote yesterday brought an official rebuff from the American Farm Bureau Federation as both parties intensified their campaigns for farm ballots.

In its first important difference with the Administration, the Farm Bureau Federation advised member units not to participate officially in Friday's Nation-wide AAA rallies because of their political tenor.

Republicans meanwhile looked hopefully to Iowa's special Congressional election today for another sampling of Midwest farm sentiment which they claimed would bear out last week's double G. O. P. House victory in Ohio.

Democrats Hopeful

Democrats retorted that today's balloting in Iowa's Sixth District lacked significance, as the district has been consistently Republican in all elections but one. Spokesmen for the Congressional Democratic campaign committee predicted a "reduced Republican margin," and one Iowan, Senator Herring, forecast a Democratic victory.

State and county farm bureaus were advised against official participation in Friday's AAA rallies in the official News-Letter of the American Farm Bureau Federation. The letter republished a statement adopted by Midwest officials of the Farm Bureau meeting last week in Des Moines, scene of today's special Congressional elections.

Three Radio Speeches

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace last week announced that President Roosevelt, Postmaster General Farley and himself would address by radio the 600 dinners of farmers in at least 19 States. Wallace said the dinners would be "quite nonpolitical" for the most part, but speeches might have a tinge of political coloring.

The Midwest Farm Bureau statement, picked up and reprinted in the Federation's national publication, reiterated "continued and uncompromising support of the principles of the national farm program."

"Not Fitting or Proper"

"We repeat what we have so often said—that we regard the farm problem as purely a problem of economics, not of partisan politics," the statement said.

"The Farm Bureau has sponsored and supported the farm program on a nonpartisan basis, and we insist that any program or activity that appears to subject the organization of the farm program to the criticism of partisan interest or influence must be avoided in our continued support, as well as in the ac-

Reds Occupy West Coast Near Viipuri

Russians Beaten On Three Fronts, 1,200 Killed, Finns Claim

By Witt Hancock.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Tuesday), March 5. The Soviet military command announced early today that Red army troops advancing over frozen Viipuri Bay had occupied several points on the west coast in their encirclement of the city of Viipuri.

The Russians said they had seized long-range naval guns and much other war material in Trongsund Fortress on Uuraansaari Island.

This was the first time the Russians had reported reaching the mainland west of Viipuri. One of the towns occupied was Vilajoki, about 15 miles west of Viipuri.

Uuraansaari Island, with its town of Uuraas and its important fortress of Trongsund, all were reported captured.

Viipuri in Soviet Vise

Previously the Red army forces had announced they were closing in on Viipuri from north, south and east, and had occupied some points in the southern suburbs of the city. At one point Viipuri's railway station itself was reported taken.

"On other sectors of the front there was nothing of importance," the communique said. "Soviet aviation bombed enemy troops and military objectives. The enemy's airplanes did not appear."

Finns Repulse Attacks

By the Associated Press

Helsinki, March 4.—Finland's outmanned defenders, locked in a death struggle with the Red army on three fronts, reported tonight they had repulsed fresh assaults on beleaguered Viipuri, driven back the Russians in the Arctic and smashed enemy attacks north of Lake Ladoga with heavy losses.

More than 1,200 Soviet troops were killed, the Finns said, as they attempted to batter their way through the wilderness northeast of the lake, where the bodies of 1,000 Russians, slain the previous day, dotted the snowy banks of the frozen Kollaa River.

Farther north, apparently taking the offensive, the Finns captured what they described as an enemy "strongpoint" near Kuhmo, while in the Arctic they said they had regained territory from which they retired last week.

Reds Drive in 3 Prongs

In an attempt to deliver the final crushing blow to Viipuri, at whose gates they have been hammering for days, the Russians launched a three-pronged attack yesterday.

While one column drove across the Bay of Viipuri in an encircling movement, the Red army attacked between the bay and the Vuoski River and from the direction of Ayrapaa, farther east.

The Finnish high command reported that all these attacks had been repulsed and indicated that

Archduke Felix (right) greets Brother Otto at Baltimore

International News Service Writer

New York, March 4.—The Archduke Otto of Hapsburg—a young man without a country or a crown, but with brave pretensions to both—arrived in New York tonight on the first leg of a three-week inspection tour of America to "see how democracy works."

"Naturally, I am a democrat," explained the charming and disarming prince of the Hapsburgs who claims the nonexistent throne of a nonexistent country, Austria-Hungary.

"Democracy and monarchy are not incompatible," he said in his soft, low-pitched voice on his arrival from Baltimore, where he landed in the afternoon by clipper plane from Lisbon.

"The future of Europe and particularly of Central Europe depends upon some kind of federated union. So I have come to the biggest and most successful democracy to see how it conducts itself," said the 27-year-old pretender.

He denied that he was here to raise funds for his restoration to the Austrian throne, that he had an appointment with J. P. Morgan or had even asked for one, or that he had any intention [illegible]

Strong Language Indicates Fascists Might Support Reich in Conflict

Tottering on Fence

Rome, March 4.—The Italian note of protest on the coal blockade, which was handed to the British yesterday and published today, was so strong that a crisis of considerable proportions is threatening.

Moreover, Italian colliers have put to sea from Rotterdam in defiance of British orders, directly challenging the Allied blockade.

The full gravity of the situation is emphasized in Rome and it is generally admitted that if this does not prove a turning point in the economic warfare, it will at least prove one of the major developments of the conflict.

This is not "just another protest."

Challenge Involves Prestige

The Italians have made formal protests before, it was divulged today, but secretly and on a strictly diplomatic plane. Now they have come out into the open with a challenge which involves their own prestige—an extremely important thing to the Fascist regime.

Moreover, Italy takes the leadership of all neutrals in their conflict with England and the Allied blockade. The problem is put on a much broader basis than the issue of coal imports to Italy from Germany.

The whole question of international law and the economic well-being of the nonbelligerents finds championship in this protest. Even the violation of mails, which has chiefly interested the United States, is here denounced as "a flagrant violation of the postal secrecy which The Hague convention of 1907 explicitly guaranteed."

Strongly Anti-British

Italy has taken a position that is not only strongly anti-British, but by implication just as strongly pro-German. She is protesting against the methods used by England to blockade Germany and she is doing so in much the same terms used by the Germans.

It is indignantly denied that Italy is playing Germany's game, and it is pointed out that Rome has never wavered in its protestations against the Allied blockade and that Italy's own interests are so clearly involved.

However, so far as its effect on the war is concerned, the distinction is academic. Italy's interests in this case at least parallel Germany's; hence, her protest is a particularly dangerous one to the Allies, since it comes from the strongest nonbelligerent in Europe and one allied militarily and polit-

Senators Open Fight for FCA Independence

Bill Filed as Black Denies Recent Stories Of Changes in Policy

In face of a move yesterday by five Democratic Senators to restore independent status to the Farm Credit Administration, the agency's new governor, Dr. A. G. Black, put "recent stories" about future FCA policy under Agriculture Department direction in the class of an Orson Welles "invasion from Mars."

The drive to remove the FCA from the Department of Agriculture, to which it had been transferred by the President's reorganization order July 31, 1939, was launched formally when Senators Gillette, of Iowa; Hatch, of New Mexico; Mead, of New York; Truman, of Missouri, and Miller, of Arkansas, jointly introduced a bill to put the FCA under an independent Federal Farm Credit Board.

The board, to consist of five members and the Secretary of Agriculture ex-officio, would be bipartisan. Members, who would serve for ten-year terms at $10,000 a year, would be chosen by the President subject to Senate confirmation.

Gov. Black's statement was made to general agents of the 12 farm

House Group Slashes Fund For Memorial

Jefferson Shrine Appropriation One Of $3,000,000 Cuts

By John B. Oakes.

A sharp cut in the 1941 budget estimate for development of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial grounds was recommended yesterday by an economy-minded House committee in reporting out the Interior Department appropriations bill.

Total slashes in the measure amount to nearly $3,000,000, bringing tentative Congressional reductions in President Roosevelt's budgetary requests past the $293,000,000 mark.

$119,000,000 for Interior

The Interior Department bill, which comes up in the House today, cuts $111,000 from the 1941 estimates for the Jefferson Memorial grounds; $69,000 from the National Capital Parks and $22,000 from Freedmen's Hospital. On the other hand, all of these recommendations are higher than last year's appropriations.

The bill as a whole would appropriate $119,000,000 for the manifold activities of the Interior Department, as compared with the budget estimate of $122,000,000 and last year's appropriation of $145,000,000.

Canal Funds Increased

Principal cuts were one of $1,000,000 flat in the $6,000,000 estimate for construction of power-transmission facilities at the Bonneville Dam, and one of $1,247,000 in the Geological Survey. Most of the Geological Survey reduction was taken out of a proposed fund for mapping "strategic areas which would be of military value."

Court Rules Medical Society Subject to Anti-Trust Charge

A decision of the District Court of Appeals yesterday holding medical organizations subject to the anti-trust laws probably will be appealed directly to the United States Supreme Court, it was indicated last night.

While counsel for the Government and for the defendant medical organizations and their officers declined comment until they had studied the decision, they previously indicated the case would be fought out in the highest tribunal. The case, under the decision yesterday, could be tried first in the District Court.

The decision was the first by any night court to support the Government's claim that it has a right to regulate "competition" among the Nation's 145,000 physicians, 4,841 hospitals and other health agencies. It reinstated and remanded for trial a criminal conspiracy charge against the District Medical Society, the American Medical Association and 23 individual physicians.

Three justices unanimously rejected the contention that physicians and organizations of physicians were immune to criminal prosecutions under the Sherman anti-trust act because they were part of a profession.

The opinion, handed down for the court by Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner, upheld validity of

Roosevelt Renames Parran To Be U. S. Surgeon General

Doctor Is Chosen To Continue Broad Health Program

President Roosevelt turned again yesterday to the man he has three times named to the highest public health post in his charge.

He renominated Dr. Thomas Parran, jr., to be the United States Surgeon General.

In 1930, Mr. Roosevelt, then Governor of New York, selected Dr. Parran to be New York State Health Commissioner.

Six years later he changed Dr. Parran's address from Albany to 3734 Oliver street northwest by making him the successor to Dr. Hugh Cumming, the former surgeon general.

In the nearly four years since Dr. Parran became surgeon general, the United States has embarked on the broadest national health program in the 140-year history of the Public Health Service.

Initiation of national programs for the control of venereal disease, cancer and pneumonia highlight the record the Senate will look at when it considers Dr. Parran's renomination.

Dr. Parran's specialty was syphilology, so it was to be expected that the Health Service under his direction would make some move in the direction of a Federal control program. Dr. Parran began by removing a taboo that once was so strong that even the word "venereal" was banned from most newspaper headlines.

His next step was initiation of a program that resulted in passage by Congress of the national venereal disease control act with appropriations for drugs and for grants-in-aid for States for the establishment of public clinics and other means of

More Subs For Canal Considered

Roosevelt Discusses New Undersea Base; Defenses Unified

By John G. Norris

Additional submarine protection for the Panama Canal is contemplated in President Roosevelt's program for strengthening canal defenses, it was learned last night.

Plans for sending additional subsurface craft to the isthmus and building a new submarine base there, officials said, have been discussed by Mr. Roosevelt with his military and naval advisers since his return from Panama.

Army officials revealed that a new Panama mobile force has been created, consisting of four infantry regiments, field artillery and other supporting troops, and a special anti-sabotage guard. All antiaircraft and coast defense units have been unified, bringing four Coast Artillery regiments and two mine-planting vessels under one command.

Heretofore, defense of the canal was divided into Atlantic and Pacific sectors.

All Army aircraft will be under one command, with a number of special troop units included in a fourth organization. The latter includes a new Aircraft Warning Signal Company, which officials would not discuss.

A high-speed military highway across the isthmus has been started, it was stated, to be completed within two years. The only means of crossing now is by boat, railroad or jungle trails.

President Roosevelt, in his inspection of the canal, found only

Nazis Take Initiative In Series of Raids; Swiss Call Up 60,000

By the Associated Press

Paris, March 4.—Fresh German divisions were reported taking places in Westwall forts today and French military dispatches told of unusual activity on the Western Front in the last 48 hours.

The Germans took the initiative in a series of week-end raids between the Rhine and Moselle rivers but the French said the action showed signs of slowing down after numerous patrol clashes. The Germans took several French prisoners yesterday in the Vosges Mountains area.

Meanwhile, the Swiss press reported that Bavarian and Austrian troops also were moving into German towns and villages opposite the Swiss frontier from the Rhine

Suspects Shot In Ferrara Case

Havana, March 4 (AP). — Carlos Marti Borges, former police lieutenant, was killed, and Joaquin Ferrer was wounded gravely today in a running gunfight with police near the political headquarters of "Strong Man" Col. Fulgencio Batista.

National police said the men resisted arrest for investigation into the attempt against the life of Dr. Orestes Ferrara, Cuban assemblyman and former Ambassador to the United States, last Friday.

Pennsylvania Mine Cave-in Forces 2,000 From Homes

Shenandoah, Pa., March 4 (AP).—Dangerously cracked buildings in one-fourth of Shenandoah were locked tonight by State inspectors as mining experts warned that cave-ins which split the walls of homes and business places today might continue at least two weeks.

Damage was estimated at $1,000,000 by Borough Councilman William Maximonis. No one of the 2,000 persons who fled their cracking homes was injured.

All morning the sinking continued slowly as buildings in a 16-block area settled into cave-ins of old anthracite diggings that honeycomb the mountain below the town.

Acting within a few hours after a "terrible rumbling" and the warning shriek of the town fire siren sent residents scurrying from sagging homes, two State agencies and borough council started a program for safety and rebuilding.

The borough council called a meeting to hire an engineer for a survey of what buildings must be condemned or rebuilt. The State department of labor and industry closed public buildings where cracks an inch to a foot wide split the walls

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Atlanta, Ga., March 5.

Here in the heart of Dixie they are leery of a third term. They hope it won't be necessary, the solid citizens, and that it won't happen. But they like Roosevelt, and they say he could carry Georgia 3 to 1 against any one else.

Harlan Miller

Many Northerners still nurture mental images of the South that are 50 years out of date. They think with some awe of the old South, proud and drowsy.

The South is still proud, but it is no longer drowsy.

* * * *

Today the South is far more liberal than Northerners suspect. In progressiveness of both thought and action there is no great distinction between business men here and the business men of active Middle Western cities. On many reforms they are misrepresented by their lingering, nostalgic statesmen of prewar vintage.

* * * *

The Republic, to a visiting de Toqueville, would seem more homogeneous today. Between Augusta and Springfield, Ill., and Sacramento the differences are more superficial and less important than the similarities.

"—Abe Lincoln and Scarlett"

You see a picture of a Southerner attending a costume ball here dressed up like Abe Lincoln, in a newspaper with a great Southern tradition like the Augusta Chronicle. (No doubt he danced a dance or two with ladies dressed like Scarlett O'Hara, too.)

* * * *

Responsible citizens tell you that the South would be better off if it harbored a stronger Republican party. It is becoming less unorthodox to say this, though you still have to be a Democrat to mingle freely with the best people and exercise much influence in local and state affairs.

* * * *

A speaker at the University of Georgia's recent Press Institute drew a spontaneous burst of applause when he said it is high time that the South once again be given a chance at the Presidency. Dixie's one-party alignment is a handicap to National progress no less than to the South's. There's only one Southerner in the Cabinet, one from the Deep South in the Supreme Court.

* * * *

The reasoning is this: The South is producing a new generation of vigorous, able young statesmen. A greater chance for National recognition would stimulate in them a viewpoint more broadly National than that of the last generation of statesmen.

Perhaps this wasn't what inspired the applause, but it is implicit in the situation.

"—every lady is a belle."

Superficially, of course, many differences survive, and I for one hope they always will. The Southern accent is as liquid and lovely as ever.

To a Northerner every Southern lady seems to have the charm, manner and perquisites of a great belle. Children go to school from 9 till 2. Business men lunch at 2 o'clock, and some of them don't clutter their desk calendars with heavy schedules after lunch.

* * * *

Southern golfers play more rounds of golf per year than their Northern prototypes. Bobby Jones is still a heroic figure. He comes over to Augusta occasionally for the big tourney at his great National golf course or just a round or two. Augusta has been a great winter resort, with two vast and magnificent hotels. Bill Taft and Woodrow Wilson used to come and bring their golf clubs.

* * * *

That was in the days when some streets of Augusta were jammed with bales of cotton in transit and there was scarcely room for the locomobiles and carriages to get through. Now the farmers are urged to turn to cattle and other crops than cotton.

The leading citizens talk calmly and objectively of the Tobacco Road locale a few miles out, just as Iowans talk objectively of the farms on the old ridge road.

Times have changed in the old South. It's the New South now.

Senate Group Votes to Block Wage Census

Subcommittee Favors Resolution to Kill Income Questions

By the Associated Press

A resolution designed to forestall census-takers from asking people how much money they make was approved yesterday by a Senate Commerce Subcommittee.

It would express the "sense of the Senate" that questions regarding personal income should be deleted from the census. Senator Tobey (Republican), of New Hampshire, the author, said he was confident the Census Bureau would strike out the questions if the Senate adopted the resolution, although it would not have to comply.

The full Commerce Committee is scheduled to vote next on the resolution. If it approves, Tobey will seek Senate consideration this week.

Committee Vote, 3-2

The subcommittee had set yesterday for voting on the proposal but members mysteriously declined to give out any information. A source of unquestionable authority disclosed, however, that the resolution had been approved three to-two. It was said unofficially that Chairman Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, and Senators Johnson, of California, and White, of Maine, Republicans, supported it while Senators Pepper, of Florida, and Maloney, of Connecticut, Democrats, opposed it.

Tobey argued that the income questions would invade the right of privacy and would develop information which might be gossiped around a neighborhood. This information, he contended, could be used for political purposes.

Census authorities declared the law provided penalties against any enumerator making public the information. They said the questions were designed to gather data which would be beneficial in efforts to solve the unemployment problem.

Third Term Quiz Suggested

A suggestion that a special set of census questions, including one with reference to third term intentions, be asked of President Roosevelt came from Representative Crawford (Republican), Michigan.

Crawford suggested in a statement that when the 1940 census taker called at the White House he inquire of the President also the number of members of the Roosevelt family "who have taken jobs with corporations * * * doing business with the Government since you became President in 1932."

"It is more essential now for the American people to know the President's intentions on a third term than it is for Government to know * * * whether some family in Chesaning, Mich., shares its bathtub with another family or whether a Saginaw family keeps warm with piped warm air or pipeless warm air," Crawford said.

West's Pay in Treasury Post Lost in House Economy Drive

Omission Is Believed Unwitting in Cutting Of Appropriation Bill

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer

Congress, bent on economy, apparently unwittingly has deleted from the Treasury-Postoffice supply bill the salary of former Representative Charles O. West as a member of the Processing Tax Board of Review, it was learned yesterday.

At least, if West's salary is paid after June 30 it will be contrary to the declared intention of the House Appropriations Committee in making the cut—or the result of a supplementary appropriation.

West, formerly a liaison officer between the White House and Congress and more recently an active third-term booster in Ohio and other States, was appointed by Secretary Morgenthau about the middle of February as the eighth member of the Processing Tax Board of Review, an obscure Treasury agency set up under the 1936 Revenue Act to review claims for refunds of processing taxes disallowed by the Internal Revenue Commissioner.

Cut Before Appointment

On January 23, three weeks before West's appointment became known, the House Appropriations Committee reported the billion-dollar Treasury-Postoffice bill. The committee had cut the item for the Processing Tax Board of Review to $145,000, or $15,000 below the President's budget estimate.

Explaining its action, the committee said that, although the budget estimate contemplated salaries for nine members of the board, it felt seven would be adequate. Before West's appointment, the board had never had more than seven regular members.

Lack of Fight Puzzling

The Treasury-Postoffice bill since has been passed by both House and Senate, still carrying only $145,000 for the Processing Tax Board. It now is in conference between the two houses but this item will not be affected by conference action.

Thus, the bill will go to the President with the review board's appropriation trimmed to provide for salaries for only seven members.

CHARLES O. WEST

Unexplained is the fact that apparently no effort was made by the Administration to restore the cut. This caused speculation as to whether West's appointment was merely a temporary assignment, to run only until the time of the Democratic National Convention.

Presumably, the Treasury might be able to effect economies and thus continue to pay West's salary even out of a reduced appropriation. But this is regarded as unlikely, since it would amount to evasion of the intent of Congress. A supplementary appropriation could be requested, but this would invite a political battle.

Jones Files Against Guffey For Senate

State Chairman Says 30 of 67 County Chiefs Back Pittsburgh Man

By the Associated Press

Harrisburg, Pa., March 4.—Pennsylvania Democrats plunged today into another primary fight for control of the party as wealthy Walter A. Jones, Pittsburgh oil man, became a Senate candidate against the incumbent, Senator Guffey.

Jones filed his nominating petitions an hour before the deadline, assured by Democratic State Chairman David L. Lawrence of the support of at least 30 of the 67 county chairmen. Nominees for United States Senate, two fiscal offices, Congress and the Legislature will be chosen April 23.

Lawrence has led opposition to Guffey ever since the Senator announced he was seeking reelection.

All for Third Term

However, Jones, the State chairman and the Senator have declared for a third term for President Roosevelt and Lawrence entered the Chief Executive's name for ballot of the preferential primary. Mr. Roosevelt's consent was not necessary for the filing.

Jones, long-time friend of Guffey, called for a primary battle "different" from that of 1938 when Guffey and Lawrence squared off in a name-calling scrap.

"I think the public is sick and tired of that kind of stink," Jones asserted.

The campaign charges of the Democratic primary in 1938, when the Lawrence ticket defeated the Guffey forces, led to a grand jury investigation, indictments and several convictions.

Republicans took up the charges in their election campaign and regained control of the State government.

Jones said he would continue to serve as chairman of the Pennsylvania turnpike commission building a $70,000,000 all-weather highway to link Harrisburg and Pittsburgh.

Guffey declined comment on Jones' candidacy but said in a campaign statement he was appealing for the nomination on the grounds he supported President Roosevelt in all New Deal measures.

Miller Fights For Relaxation Of Hatch Act

Senate Opens Battle On Proposed Extension Of Political Curb

Senate battle lines were drawn last night for a fight today over extending the Hatch Act to prevent District and State employes paid with Federal funds from engaging in political activity.

While Majority Leader Barkley said he would vote for the proposal and predicted victory, Majority Whip Minton was campaigning for its defeat.

As part of the struggle against the bill, it was revealed last night that Senator Miller (Democrat), of Arkansas, would introduce an amendment aimed not only at the bill before the Senate but also at the original Hatch Act passed last year to take Federal employes out of politics.

Hatch Fights Proposal

Adoption of Miller's proposal, which would have the effect of allowing political activity to all employes paid from Federal funds, would result in "defeat of the Democratic Party in 1940," Senator Hatch declared.

Explaining that "resentment" throughout the country would prove a boomerang, Hatch said that "acceptance of Senator Miller's amendment would cost the party thousands more votes than all the State and Federal employes the Democrats could muster."

Miller's amendment would retain those clauses in the original Hatch Act forbidding coercion of Federal employes, but it would revise the law to permit "voluntary" political activity.

Miller Calls Act Ruinous

"Unless my amendment is adopted," said the Arkansas Senator, "the Hatch Act will ruin the Democratic Party. There is no reason why a collector of internal revenue should be forbidden to make a speech or walk into a political headquarters—rights which any citizen should have."

Meanwhile, opponents of Hatch act extension toyed with the idea of tacking antilynching legislation onto the proposed bill, in order to insure its defeat at the hands of Southerners.

Under terms of an amendment by Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, Federal, State and local employes would be given right of appeal to a special board if they were found by the Civil Service Commission to have violated the law.

Danaher said his amendment "merely provides the justice that should be accorded all Government workers" affected by the act and who are ruled guilty of violations.

Track Official Says Democrats Asked $100,000

Payment Would Bring Winter Racing Dates In California, He Asserts

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, March 4.—George F. Young, vice president of the Hollywood Turf Club track at Inglewood, testified today he was assured his organization could have winter racing dates if it would contribute $100,000 to the Democratic Party in California in 1940.

He testified before a State Senate committee investigating activities of the State Racing Commission.

Efforts were made last fall to have winter dates divided between Hollywood Park and Santa Anita. The latter has had the winter dates exclusively.

Young said Norman W. Church, prominent horse breeder and supporter of the Democratic Party in California, and a Ralph Evans met him, and Evans "told me they wanted a donation of $100,000 for the Democratic Party in 1940."

Young said he replied that the request was out of all reason. Church then repeated the demand, he said, and added that "we want $150,000 in 1941."

Earl B. Gilmore, president of the Hollywood Turf Club, testified he had been told it would be possible for the track to get winter racing dates.

Edward Young, chairman of the racing commission, asked Gilmore:

"Do you remember telling me that someone had approached you and said that you could get racing dates for $125,000?"

"Yes."

"And did I not say that if I heard of your track giving a cent to anybody for that purpose you would never get any dates?"

Roosevelt Marks Date Of Inaugural

Attends Church Rites With Family, Friends; Garner Sends Regrets

President Roosevelt yesterday observed the seventh anniversary of his first inauguration by attending a quiet church service, while Senator Barkley, Kentucky, Democratic leader, made it the occasion for a Senate speech praising New Deal accomplishments.

Accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt, his 85-year-old mother, Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, and White House aides, the President attended a special morning service at St. John's Episcopal Church, Sixteenth and H streets northwest. This has been an annual custom since his first inauguration.

The hope and desire for peace in a war-torn world was the theme of the service. The Rev. Edward S. Wilkinson, of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, which the President customarily attends, read from Micah the prophecy that in the last days the nations would "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks."

"Nation shall not lift up a sword against nation," he intoned, "neither shall they learn war any more."

The small group for whom these words were a fervent hope included Cabinet officers, other Administration officials, Congressional leaders and District Commissioners.

Attired in a dark blue business suit, the President entered the church by a side door on the arm of Brig. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, secretary and military aide. With him were Stephen T. Early, another secretary, and Capt. Daniel J. Callaghan, naval aide.

There was no sermon. The service, which lasted 20 minutes, consisted of hymns, prayers and responsive readings. Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, which the President attended as a boy, read a prayer for divine guidance of the Chief Executive and for deliverance of nations "from cruelties of war."

Garner Sends Regrets

The Rev. Frank R. Wilson, rector of the President's church at his home in Hyde Park, opened the service. Dr. Peabody pronounced the benediction.

Vice President Garner was invited to attend the service, but sent his regrets.

Following the service, the President, looking robust and tanned as a result of his vacation trip, returned to the White House for a round of conferences with Administration officials on the foreign situation and domestic fiscal problems.

He talked with a group comprising Secretary Morgenthau, Undersecretary Bell, Chariman Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board and Lauchlin Currie, administrative assistant dealing with economic problems. Secretary Ickes was in for lunch and Secretary Hull for an afternoon conference.

Barkley, in his Senate speech, which lasted two hours, said no President since Lincoln had faced such a crisis as Mr. Roosevelt faced when he took office March 4, 1933.

Challenges Critics

He predicted that Government machinery for "orderly collective bargaining" would be perfected so as to function more effectively. He did not indicate, however, that any legislative changes would be sought in the Wagner Labor Act.

The President's continued interest in the rights of labor, he declared, "has brought upon him more violent criticism than any of his other policies." He regretted it had not received better cooperation from organized labor.

Although it is regrettable, he said, that millions still are unemployed, Administration critics have failed to offer "any constructive suggestions that would contribute to a solution of the unemployment problem."

It is a compliment to the President, he declared, that Republican Presidential candidates do not "recommend the repeal or substantial modification of a single major legislative act," but only claim that they need improvement.

Pennsylvania Mine Cave-in Forces 2,000 From Homes

risburg to check on safety measures in the network of old diggings beneath the mountain-fringed town.

A committee of townspeople demanded that all mining operations near the city be halted. Miners stopped operations at once.

Walls of several hundred homes were cracked, roofs sagged, walls bulged, doors jammed until residents had to climb through windows.

Feared End of World

Mrs. Julia Jadus, mother of three, whose frame house was twisted awry, said she was awakened by "a terrible noise—like rocks falling—and a rapping on the roof."

"I hope I never have to go through that feeling again," she said. "Even my husband was scared. We would stand in one place and then in another. We didn't know what to do or where to go."

Mrs. Wassil Katalinas, who stuffed rags in cracks the settling opened in walls of her home, commented:

"It was awful. We thought it was the end of the world."

Noise Continues 4 Hours

Borough and State police roped off the area affected and volunteer patrols guarded against fires. Water was shut off because the pumping plant is in the section that sank.

The noise continued intermittently for four hours. The settling went on slowly from 2 a. m. until noon, then apparently stopped.

There was little hope, however, that the subsidence was permanently ended.

Joseph Gladsky, a representative of the United Mine Workers, said the settling probably would continue at least two weeks.

Ice Sheathes East, Damage In Millions

Snow, Wind and Sleet Spread Destruction In North Atlantic Areas

By the Associated Press

Wind-borne ice and snow weighed heavily last night on the North Atlantic seaboard States with a cost in property destruction greater in some sections than the disastrous New England hurricane of September, 1938.

The most apparent damage was in northern New Jersey, New York City and suburban Westchester County areas which were on the fringe of the $500,000,000 storm of 1938.

Rain, freezing as it fell, sheated farmlands and cities from northeastern Pennsylvania to Boston with a glassy crust ruinous to orchards, shrubbery and utilities networks.

Power Lines Wrecked

Power lines snapped, leaving many communities without heat, light or telephone service. The spreading ice crushed hundreds of thousands of trees and bushes and left a tracery of death over heavily traveled highways. Traffic was blocked on many roads and city streets. Many rural schools closed.

The rapid freeze removed an incipient flood threat, however, in upstate New York.

At Norwalk an observer said "one in every three" trees in the city had been felled by tons of ice.

Scores of storm accidents were reported over the area. A fire menace was created in the Bronx, when 800 fire alarm boxes went out of commission. Some 7,856 Bronx telephones also were out of order and thousands of homes were without lights.

Building Is Roped Off

Police roped off the 50-story General Electric Building in Manhattan because of an accumulation of ice at the top.

The park department estimated 65,000 trees had been damaged in upper Manhattan and the Bronx alone and that it would take $600,000 to $700,000 to repair them.

At least three deaths—two traffic fatalities in New Jersey Sunday night and a Pennsylvania man who touched a live wire blown down by the storm—were reported.

The fall of rain, measured at approximately two inches, began Sunday. Freezing started Sunday night and continued through yesterday. The wind ranged from 40-mile gusts in New York City to a 70-mile-an-hour clip on eastern Long Island.

Dr. James H. Kimball, of the New York Weather Bureau, predicted additional damage to New Jersey and Long Island beaches, and the New England shore areas.

Mae Murray Wins Custody Of Son, 13

MAE MURRAY

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, March 4.—Mae Murray won a custody action against her former husband, Prince David Mdivani, today.

Superior Judge George A. Dockwieler ordered her to retain custody of her 13-year-old son, Koran David Mdivani, now in the care of an Albany, N. Y., family.

Judge Dockweiler also ordered Mdivani to pay $400 a month to the former film star for the "support care and maintenance and education of their son."

He also ordered payment of $3,500 to Miss Murray's attorneys, Robert S. Burns and Milan Medigovich.

Mdivani Criticized

Coupling his decision with a criticism of the polo-playing Mdivani, Judge Dockweiler said:

"It is most singular to note that he would spend substantial sums for distant relatives and friends abroad but, with respect to his own flesh and blood, he made no contribution for many years, other than a few paltry dollars he gave to his wife for their son's needs.

"This is indeed something the court can hardly understand, for which the defendant gave no adequate explanation."

Miss Murray sued Mdivani for $1,000 a month to enable her to establish a home for the son who was given, under a New York court order, to neutral persons until she could maintain a suitable home.

The blonde Miss Murray testified she spent all her funds in a battle to save the boy's life during a critical illness three years ago. She had complained that Mdivani dissipated her funds while they were married, and that although she was worth $3,000,000 in 1926, ten years later she had spent three nights on a bench in New York's Central Park, penniless.

Mdivani, denying he had ever refused to aid Miss Murray in care of his son, said he was supporting an uncle, three cousins and a physician friend in Paris and had aided numerous Russian refugees.

Mrs. Roosevelt Praises Children's Ward At Gallinger, Equipped by District Club

The newly equipped crippled children's ward at Gallinger Hospital drew praise yesterday from Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as Representative Thomas D'Alesandro, jr., prepared to conclude his welfare inquiry today.

Following an inspection of the Gallinger Hospital ward, equipped recently by the Twentieth Century Club, Mrs. Roosevelt expressed surprise at what she had seen and congratulated Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent.

"I never expected to find anything so nice at Gallinger Hospital," she said, "and I think it is a tribute to Dr. Bocock and the Twentieth Century Club."

She Talks With Children

Mrs. Roosevelt stopped and chatted with crippled children as she was shown through the renovated basement and laughed when her attention was called to a 11-year-old colored boy whose name is "Roosevelt Champion." Obligingly, she stood beside the boy while cameras clicked.

After talking with Ernest Kanolopelis, 16 years old, of 1324 Monroe street northwest, who has been in the hospital for two years taking treatment for infantile paralysis, Mrs. Roosevelt said she was "astounded" that the boy, who was stricken when 2, could have remained uncared for in a city as large as Washington for 14 years.

"It seems incredible," she said. "I might have expected such negligence in rural areas, but not in a city this size."

Bocock, Ruhland Escort Her

Dr. Bocock and Health Officer George C. Ruhland escorted Mrs. Roosevelt through the ward, where crippled children worked at handcrafts or looked curiously from their beds at the distinguished visitor.

"It's wonderful how you have so much light down here," Mrs. Roosevelt commented. "You've got all the things necessary down here to make people work."

Dr. Bocock said there are 30 children in the ward and 400 are given treatments while living at home.

Among those who met Mrs. Roosevelt at Gallinger were Mrs. E. G. Montgomery, president of the Twentieth Century Club, and Mrs. Thomas West, chairman of the committee which raised $2,000 to equip the clinic.

Report to Be Asked

Following an inspection trip to the National Training School for Girls and the Industrial Home School, Representative D'Alesandro said he will ask Miss Katherine Lenroot, director of the Children's Bureau, Labor Department, to make a report on the institution.

"The institutions seem to be operated about as well as they could be under present appropriations," he said.

D'Alesandro expects a report on District penal institutions today from James V. Bennett, director of the United States Bureau of Prisons. He inspected the jail and reformatory last week.

Hitler and Stalin Sued on Brooklyn Realty Mortgage

New York, March 4.—Adolf Hitler and Josef Stalin, whose acquisitions of European real estate have attracted world-wide attention, were named today in Brooklyn Supreme Court as codefendants in a mortgage foreclosure action based on their ownership of a six-family building in Brooklyn.

Justice Harry E. Lewis reserved decision on the application of the Dime Savings Bank in Brooklyn, holder of the mortgage, to serve Hitler and Stalin at their "home addresses" by mail and by publication.

The strange case started January 24 when Martin Auslander and Julius B. Freilocher, owners of the property, transferred title to Hitler and Stalin.

Counsel for the bank told the court the title had been transferred to "embarrass" the bank but in order to protect its interests under the law the bank must in some manner serve Hitler and Stalin before proceeding with the foreclosure. It is estimated that would take $225 in cash and nine weeks.

Two in Congress Ask British Pay Debt With Islands

Senator Reynolds of North Carolina and Representative Randolph of West Virginia, both Democrats, proposed in resolutions yesterday that the British government pay "a part of its war debt" by ceding to the United States islands in the Caribbean and British Honduras.

The resolutions would authorize the President to undertake negotiations to obtain:

The Bermudas, Bahamas, Jamaica, with the Turks and Cacos and Cayman islands, Trinidad and Tobago, Barbados, the Leeward Islands, Antigua, St. Kitts-Nevis, Dominica, Montserrat and Virgin islands, the Windward Islands, Grenada and the Grenadines, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and British Honduras.

Reynolds said that such a move would aid in establishment of an "adequate" national defense.

Does Dandruff Cause Baldness?

THREE Major scalp ills, defined by specialists as types of dandruff, are said to cause more than 80% of all cases of baldness. Dandruff is, therefore, definitely a serious local scalp ailment which will lead to baldness unless given highly specialized attention.

Haphazard or cure-all treatment rarely overcomes dandruff. To combat it effectively you must first determine which type of dandruff is attacking your hair-growing structure, and then direct treatment to specifically overcome that particular type. Thomas treatment does precisely this!

How to Avoid Baldness

Thomas experts know how to recognize and effectively treat the three types of dandruff as well as various other local scalp troubles which cause baldness. Thomas treatment definitely combats your dandruff, checks abnormal hair-fall, and promotes natural hair growth for you.

More than a quarter million persons have ended scalp troubles by The Thomas' method. Thomas can help you, too, to have a good head of hair. Come in person today to the nearest Thomas office. No charge is ever made for scalp examination, advice, or consultation (always in private).

Senators Open Fight for FCA Independence

credit districts who are meeting here.

He said the present situation concerning FCA operations, as coordinated with the Department of Agriculture, apparently had created "unwarranted misunderstandings" similar to those following the "Mars invasion" broadcasts in 1938.

Black said the record of the department for the past 75 years showed it had operated exclusively in the interests of farmers and that "closer articulation of the FCA with the organization would have to reverse such a trend if it were to be anything other than helpful."

"After all," he said, "the FCA is created and directed by laws to do certain things and certainly there will be no effort from an administrative standpoint to seek more leeway in their administration than they themselves give and the approach, of course, always will be to give the farmers the best service possible.

"Farmers will find in the administration of the laws governing the FCA there will be no effort to circumvent or to evade and there will be no disposal to narrow the range or dictate ways in which responsible executives, either here in Washington or in the field, should operate.

"So far as the relationship with the Department of Agriculture is concerned," continued Black, "that is a matter which will develop in the future, for there are no preconceived notions. In fact, I anticiparte there will be finally worked out a form of articulation which is perhaps a little foreign t oany that now exist between the department as a whole and its various units."

Meantime, three other Senators and one House member proposed different legislation yesterday to have the Government guarantee land bank bonds and to set a flat 3 per cent rate on all farm real estate loans, as compared to the present 3½ per cent on land bank, and 4 per cent on land bank commissioner loans.

Senators Wheeler, of Montana, and Bankhead, of Alabama (Democrats); La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, and Chairman Jones (Democrat), of Texas, of the House Agriculture Committee, sponsored the bill.

In a statement to Congress the authors said the legislation "abolishes foreclosure proceedings and deficiency judgments except in cases of willful or negligent damage to the mortgaged property."

The independent status bill offered yesterday by the five Senators was to have been indorsed also by Senator Minton (Democrat), of Indiana, according to an announcement of Gillette last week. Minton, however, said that since then he had learned the farmers of his State were not of one mind on the issue and that he had decided to study the matter further before making a decision on it.

Farm Groups Back Move

The bill provides for abolition of the four FCA commissioners and vesting of their powers in the new board.

The legislation carried indorsement of five major farm organizations, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives (formerly the National Cooperative Council), the National Wool Growers Association and the American National Livestock Association.

In a letter to Gillette signed by representatives of the last four bodies, the organizations said they believed the bill would have the ultimate result of enabling the farmer to gain full control of the credit agencies he uses.

Pointing out that 2,000,000 farmers invested $130,000,000 of their own money in FCA securities, the letter said that when all of the FCA units are placed on a self-sustaining basis, they can be entirely eliminated from the Federal budget.

England Denies Stealing Secrets

London, March 4.—While British officials admitted today that, in "warranted" cases, information and trade secrets obtained by search of American mails are used to tighten the blockade of Germany, Sir John Reith, minister of information, told the House of Commons that "steps are being taken" to counteract "propaganda in the United States to the effect that the opening of the mails camouflages the theft of American trade secrets for the benefit of British firms."

Lehman Assails G. O. P. Tax Plan

Albany, N. Y., March 4 (U.P.).—Gov. Lehman tonight assailed a Republican plan to reduce the State budget and raise new revenue without taxes, and proposed a counter program for a $10,000,000 reduction in the $396,700,000 spending program.

Republican legislative leaders last week proposed to cut $5,600,000 from the budget and raise $10,000,000 in new revenue to permit elimination of Lehman's recommended $15,000,000 increase in the personal income tax.

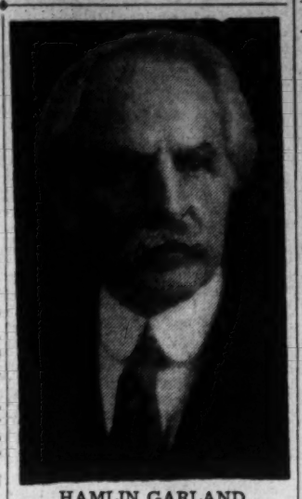
'Dean of American Letters' Succumbs In Hollywood



HAMLIN GARLAND

Hollywood, March 4 (AP).—Hamlin Garland, 79, known as the "dean of American letters," died tonight of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Garland, a native of West Salem, Wis., won the Pulitzer Prize for biography in 1922.

Among his best-known novels are "A Son of the Middle Border," "Prairie Folks," "Crumbling Idols," "Tyranny of the Dark" and "The Long Trail." His most recent works, both nonfiction, were "Forty Years of Psychic Research" and "The Mystery of the Buried Crosses."

At his bedside were his wife, Zulime, sister of Lorado Taft, Chicago sculptor, and two daughters, Mrs. Constance Harper and Mrs. Mindret Lord.

He was stricken Friday night and did not regain consciousness.

Garland was writing final chapters of a book, "The Fortunate Exile," describing his ten years in Southern California, and had instructed his family that he wanted it published only after his death.

Garland had been in good health until recently, working several hours a day in his garden at his home in the hills here. He was born at West Salem, Wis., September 14, 1860.

mous Corcoran-Cohen brain-trusting team, and Edward H. Foley, jr., general counsel of the Treasury. Corcoran and Miss Dowd motored to Leesburg. They obtained a marriage license at the office of County Clerk E. O. Russell.

Miss Dowd, wearing a tweed traveling suit, and Corcoran, dressed in a dark business suit, then went to the church for the brief ceremony. Foley as best man, while his sister, Miss Katherine Foley, secretary to Undersecretary of Commerce Edward J. Noble, attended the bride.

Other members of the wedding party were the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Dowd, 5301 Fourth street northwest; Mrs. George Foulkes, a sister of Mrs. Corcoran and the wife of a Washington attorney; Miss Agnes Boyd, another sister who is secretary to Dr. Martin McGuire, dean of the graduate school at Catholic University, and the bride's brothers, Joseph Dowd, a Georgetown University premedical graduate, and James Dowd, student at the University of Maryland.

News to White House

Before returning to Washington, the party stopped near Leesburg for a wedding supper.

In Washington, Foley gave the newlyweds a party in his apartment at the Westchester. "Tommy the Cork" and his bride posed for a photographer by gazing at a rabbit's foot.

Arrangements for the wedding were carried out so quietly that members of the official White House family were still describing the marriage as a "rumor" more than an hour after it had taken place.

Fifteen minutes after the ceremony Corcoran telephoned a close friend in Washington, Lowell Mellett, director of the office of information, and gave him the "story." Mellett, a former newspaper editor in Washington, passed the information on to newspapers and press associations and provided them with pictures of the bride.

No Surprise to Friends

Mellett emphasized that the marriage was by no means sudden or a surprise to intimate friends of the couple, pointing out the obvious care with which arrangements had been made.

Corcoran, brilliant lawyer son of a Pawtucket, R. I., attorney, head of his class at Harvard University, first came to Washington as secretary to the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

He entered the Government service in the Hoover Administration as a lawyer in the newly organized Reconstruction Finance Corporation, before leaping into the limelight at a top-notch Roosevelt "brain truster."

The RFC has chiefly been Corcoran's base for wide activities. He collaborated with Cohen in writing the Securities and Exchange Commission and Wage and Hour Acts.

Credited for Purge

He also is credited with undertaking the 1938 political purge.

About a year ago, Administrative leaders at the Capitol initiated a purge of their own. They failed to remove Corcoran, but they did succeed in restricting his activities.

Recently Corcoran and Cohen were reported as saying they will leave the Government service together no later than January, 1941.

priation bill," the committee observed.

On the other hands, the committee voted $500,000 more than budget estimates for continuing construction on the All-American Canal, partly because "work on this type of project will give employment to an unusually large percentage of persons." A total of $1,500,000 was voted for the canal in 1941.

In its estimates for the District, the committee recommended $289,900 for the National Capital Parks, $26,700 above 1940 but $69,060 less than the budget request. The reductions came through a disallowance of $40,000 for construction of a police lodge and comfort station at the Water Gate, to accommodate crowds at the summer concerts; and a disallowance of $28,000 to heat the Lincoln Memorial.

During hearings on these items, the committee revealed yesterday, Representative Johnson (Democrat), of Oklahoma, objected that a $40,000 comfort station would be "the laughing stock of the country."

Protection for Murals

The $28,000 request for the Lincoln Memorial was for a heating system to protect the murals, A. E. Demaray, of the National Park Service, explained. He informed the committee that the murals are already "beginning to show signs of deterioration, due to the condensation of the cold air which comes in there."

The $111,260 slash in the budgetary request for $375,000 for developing the grounds around the Jefferson Memorial will defer cutting away a portion of the sea wall on the Tidal Basin and consequent removal of a number of cherry trees. Other work on the grounds, including filling in the sea wall in one place, was disapproved by the committee after one or two members had protested the expense. The committee granted $15,000 for improvement and repairs to the Washington Monument.

Three of the four institutions in the District under control of the Interior Department—St. Elizabeths Hospital, Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Howard University—were granted the budget estimates, while the fourth, Freedmen's Hospital, was cut.

Increase for Hospital

St. Elizabeths was granted the budget estimate of $1,240,285, an increase of $13,005 over last year to provide for 25 additional patients, or a total of 6,525.

Columbia Institution for the Deaf is also granted the budget estimate of $143,000, or $7,950 less than for 1940. The Federal contribution, however, will allow additional food, equipment and improvements in plumbing.

A $5,200 increase above the budget for Howard University—to a total of $747,160, or $2,160 more than last year—merely represents a transfer of two positions from Freedmen's Hospital, which took a corresponding cut, plus an additional slash of $17,280.

However, the $557,145 granted Freedmen's is $72,305 in excess of the 1940 appropriation, "due almost entirely," the committee explained, "to operation on a six months' basis of the new tuberculosis unit which will have a capacity of 150 beds."

the indictment by three determinations. These were:

1. "Trade" regulated by criminal statutes enacted by authority of the commerce clause of the Constitution is not confined to commercial activity "but embraces as well the field of the medical profession."

2. Medical society threats to expel doctors affiliated with group practice enterprises, denying such doctors professional contacts and getting them barred from hospitals are illegal and "unresonable restraints" of trade.

3. A criminal offense was charged by a statement of the campaign of A. M. A. and the District society to "hinder the successful operation of Group Health Association, Inc.," of Washington.

Vinson, Miller Concur

Justices Fred Vinson and Justin Miller concurred in the 16-page opinion read by the Chief Justice, who gave an exhaustive history of the law against restraints of trade. Among authorities quoted at length in the opinion was a decision handed down in 1919 by the British Court of King's Bench.

Chief Justice Groner summarized the conflict started with the formation of Group Health Association, Inc., by Federal workers four years ago. G. H. A. complained that it was being persecuted by "organized medicine" and placed an information with the Department of Justice in 1938. After more than two months of investigation, in which scores of nationally prominent physicians were witnesses, a special grand jury returned an indictment in December, 1938.

Accused of criminal conspiracy were the District society, A. M. A., Harris County (Texas) Medical Society, Washington Academy of Surgery and 21 individual physicians, who included some of the most noted doctors in the country.

110,000 in A. M. A.

The indictment said that 110,000 doctors belong to A. M. A. and that it was the only important national society of the medical profession. It was asserted that the A. M. A. Bureau of Medical Economics "had taken a leading part in carrying out the association's policy of discouraging and suppressing group medical practice on a risk-sharing prepayment basis." (The legality of such enterprises was upheld in Washington in 1938.—Editor's note.)

The indictment said that A. M. A. and its locals, like the District and Harris County societies, by expelling members, could handicap their practice of medicine and by the societies' power to approve or blacklist hospitals they could control medicl staffs.

As an instance of such efforts, the indictment quoted a resolution by which the Distirct society declared on November 2, 1937, that it "has an apparent means of hindering the successful operation of G. H. A. if it can prevent patients of physicians in its employ being received in the local private hospitals." The resolution said conflicts with the hospitals should "be assiduously avoided, if possible, because of the unfavorable publicity."

The indictment then recited disciplinary action by the medical groups against several members.

Justice James M. Proctor, of the District Court, sustained demurrers to the indictment because he found that medicine was not a "trade" under the law and the indictment was vague and uncertain about the alleged crime.

Justice Proctor was guided by Supreme Court Justice Joseph Story, who said more than 100 years ago that "any occupation . . . not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions, is constantly called a trade." This decision has many times been quoted by the Supreme Court.

Chief Justice Groner said, however, that "the learned trial judge felt that the . . . words should be regarded as an authoritative statement of the Supreme Court that the learned professions were not trades and therefore not within the intent of the act. But we think this by no means follows."

tions of those charged with the administration of the program.

"Therefore we are of the opinion, which we are assured coincides with the opinion of the officers of the American Farm Bureau Federation, that it would not be fitting or proper, particularly in a Presidential election year, for the Farm Bureaus which we represent to participate in the proposed celebration, which is being emphasized in the Middle West."

Today's balloting for Iowa's vacant House seat will come in the home district of Secretary Wallace, but except in 1934, when former Representative Utterback carried the district, it has been Republican territory. A G. O. P. victory would mean no net addition to Republican House strength. Democrats promised only a "good showing" but hoped for an upset that would offset last week's Republican gain in Ohio. Candidates are Robert K. Goodwin, Republican mayor of Redfield, and Byron G. Allen, Des Moines Democrat.

The third-term issue meanwhile was laid formally before Congress, when Vice President Garner, in his routine role as Senate presiding officer, received the New York Legislature's resolution memorializing Congress to bar by legislation a third term for any President.

Garner, himself running against Roosevelt third term slates in Illinois and Wisconsin, as part of the day's business received the resolution from the Senate clerk and laid it before the Senate.

At the Capitol, another Democratic Senator voiced the hope that President Roosevelt would not seek a third term. Senator Truman, of Missouri, said he had always opposed the third-term idea because of the two-term tradition, but if the President should run, "I will support him."

Commenting on an article in yesterday's Post, reporting the President had informed one Democratic stalwart that he probably would not run and that Secretary of State Hull was his choice, White House Secretary Stephen T. Early said it undoubtedly fell in one of the four categories in which Thomas Jefferson said news should be classified. These were: True; probable; possible; lies. Early said "free exercise of the prerogatives that go with a free press" permitted publication of the article.

Dr. Karl Muck, Former Boston Musician, Dies

Orchestra Conductor Quit in War Row Over National Anthem

By the Associated Press

Stuttgart, Germany, March 4.—Dr. Karl Muck, 80, celebrated interpreter of Wagnerian music at the Bayreuth festivals and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1906 to 1908 and again from 1912 to 1918, died today.

Dr. Muck's last appearance as a national music figure was at the Leipzig observance of the fiftieth anniversary of Richard Wagner's death in February, 1933. On his last birthday, Dr. Muck was awarded the order of the German Eagle by Fuehrer Hitler.

As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the World War, Dr. Muck became the central figure in a "cause celebre" when war-time patriotic groups sought to "put him to the test" by demanding the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" prior to a concert in Providence, R. I., October 30, 1917.

The anthem was not played, but the late Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the orchestra, pleaded that the request was received too late for a rehearsal.

Dr. Muck subsequently conducted the "Star Spangled Banner" at other concerts elsewhere in the East but war-time hysteria caused him so much embarrassment that he finally resigned. He later was interned and became embittered toward America.

In Boston today, when Serge Koussevitzky, present director of the orchestra, halted a rehearsal to inform the players of Dr. Muck's death, the musicians rose in a silent two-minute tribute to their former leader.

combatting syphilis and gonorrhea.

Dr. Parran also was largely responsible for arousing public interest to the point where Congress set up the National Cancer Institute with headquarters at Bethesda, Md., with funds for State and private aid and for purchase of radium under supervision of the National Advisory Cancer Council, of which the surgeon general is the ex officio chairman.

Pneumonia ranks third among fatal diseases in America. Dr. Parran moved against it by bringing to his National Institute of Health, the service's research center on the banks of the Potomac, Dr. Lloyd E. Felton, Johns Hopkins developer of a pneumonia serum.

Born in Maryland

Since Dr. Felton's addition to the health service's staff, a vaccine has been developed for pneumonia immunization. It has been used on tens of thousands of CCC enrollees with results the Government has found "encouraging."

Washington is almost home to Dr. Parran. He was born in 1892 at St. Leonard, Md., and grew up on a farm that has belonged to his family since 1650. He received his A. B. at St. John's College, Annapolis, and his M. D. at Georgetown University Medical School.

He is married and has four sons.

Woman Saves Three Friends, Wins Medal

MRS. ELIZABETH MASON

A 25-year-old Washington woman who last summer swam 1½ miles through choppy Long Island Sound to save three lives, said last night she felt "highly honored" at being selected for a heroism award of the Life Saving Saving Benevolent Association of New York.

Attractive Mrs. Elizabeth Russell Mason, of 1825 New Hampshire avenue northwest, will go to New York tomorrow to receive the association's gold medal in ceremonies in the Maritime Exchange, 80 Broad street. It is awarded annually.

July 22 Mrs. Mason and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Sammis, and Mrs. Robert Daley, all of Long Island, were hurled into the sound when their dory capsized off Peconic Bay. While Sammis helped the two other women, who were unable to swim, to cling to the boat, Mrs. Mason swam to shore. She reached the beach, gasped out the plight of her friends, then collapsed.

Fleming Plans To Promote From Within

Personnel Program, Procedure Explained At Press Conference

By Alfred Friendly

Personnel affairs of the wage and hour division of the Labor Department will be conducted on a strict promotion-from-within basis, employes were assured yesterday in a statement of the division administrator, Col. Philip Fleming.

Fleming also revealed that he contemplated holding hearings this month on a redefinition of "administrative and executive" positions in private industries covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act. A request for the redetermination had been made by the Southern States Industrial Association. Another hearing, to redefine the status of purchasing agents for retail stores, will be held in March at the request of the National Retailers Association, Fleming said.

The statements were made at a press conference after Fleming took the oath of office as administrator. Since October 17, 1939, Fleming has been actually, although not nominally, in charge of the division. Recent legislation, permitting an Army officer on active duty to hold the job, made possible his assuming formal control yesterday.

Explains Procedure

Fleming assured employes that all vacancies in his organization would be filled by eligible employes in the division. Where qualified division employes are not available to fill vacancies in higher brackets, the other employes of the Labor Department will be given next chance. Thereafter, eligibles will be considered first from other departments and then from the civil service lists.

In making redefinitions of employment categories covered by the act, Fleming indicated, he preferred to handle cases on a specific basis, covering or exempting jobs as they were constituted in individual industries. The Southern industrialist' request for redefinition, he admitted, was not on a specific basis, but concerned the general categories of administrative and executive employes "in a pretty wide field."

Complaints Pouring It

The administrator said he had received no formal request to redefine professional employes, except for a brief from the American Newspaper Publishers Association, filed in 1938, concerning newspaper employes. He indicated that he was not contemplating immediate hearings on thsi subject.

Fleming said that since reorganization on January 1 the division's system of settling complaints, about 70 cases were being closed each week. Complaints were coming in, however, at the rate of about 900 in the past two weeks.

Asked about pending amendments to the act, Fleming said he would "prefer" that Congress defer action until he had been given a chance to make a reexamination of existing procedure and definitions.

O'Mahoney Reminded

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, was responsible for the passage of a rider to an appropriation bill last year forbidding Federal information offices from mailing material to any newspapers or individuals who had not specifically requested the releases.

The O'Mahoney rider, which is a thorough pain in the neck to every Government press office, struck home with a vengeance last week when O'Mahoney himself took the Senate floor to speak on a matter of vital interest to his State—a question of stopping withdrawals of oil from public lands in the Lance Creek field in Wyoming.

The next day, the Interior Department, by arrangement with the Senator, issued a statement on its own position in the matter, summarizing a letter sent to O'Mahoney, and supporting his position. Not a paper in Wyoming carried the story. The reason was that no Wyoming paper had requested Interior Department releases, and the department, therefore, was forbidden to circulate the mimeographed statement.

Sick Leave Benefit

The President yesterday signed legislation protecting Federal employes from being docked for sick or annual leave for being absent on days when they would not ordinarily have been working.

The law provides that days of annual leave shall exclude Sundays, holidays and other days that do not fall within a regular tour of duty.

House Approves Moore Portrait

The House yesterday approved a proposal to acquire for the Smithsonian Institution an oil portrait of Dr. Charles Moore, former chairman of the Fine Arts Commission.

The House Library Committee commented that Dr. Moore had "devoted 50 years to the development of the National Capital."

Rep. Brewster to Give a Coming-Out Party Today for Potato Milk Wafer Developed By Dr. Webb of Agriculture Department

A new potato chip makes its world premiere in Washington at 5 p. m. today at a party to be given by Representative Ralph O. Brewster (Republican), of one of the greatest potato-raising States, Maine.

The chip is called a "potato milk wafer" by its discoverer, Dr. B. H. Webb, a dairy manufacturing specialist, Division of Dairy Research Laboratories, Bureau of Dairy Industry, Agriculture Department. One year went into the work; which is, however, only a part of Dr. Webb's activities.

The goal was a new use for skim milk and potatoes. The result, shown at a preview afternoon, was a product in long, crisp, brown strips, of slightly thicker texture than the commonly known potato chip and a taste less salty.

Disinterested tasters could not ally the new chip with a bottle of beer or with cocktails, but rather, because of its full-bodies taste, it inclines to the crouton side and seemed made for a bowl of soup. The potato taste is there, undertoned by a suggestion of cheese, lent by the skim-milk.

Seventy cans of the wafers have been sent to Admiral Byrd in the Antarctic. Agriculture scientists have been invited to the Brewster party, to be held at the Mayflower Hotel.

Tavern Owner Freed in Killing Of Mechanic

A coroner's jury yesterday freed James C. McGuire, 38-year-old restaurant owner, after ruling that he had killed Marvin Goodwin, 39, in self-defense early Saturday. The fight occurred outside McGuire's tavern, 1302 Eleventh street northwest.

Goodwin, an automobile mechanic, who lived at 1125 Eleventh street northwest, died of a fractured skull Saturday night in Emergency Hospital.

William B. Swann, of 1621 Thirteenth street northwest, a cook, and Norma Donovan, of 1223 Twelfth street northwest, a waitress in McGuire's restaurant, testified that McGuire was attacked by Goodwin and his two sons, Hugh, 20, and Carl, 18.

The Goodwin boys said that McGuire struck Carl and that their father grabbed McGuire to stop the fight. They said that they ran to call a policeman and when they returned, found their father unconscious on the sidewalk.

House Group Denies Byrd Added Funds

By the Associated Press

The House Appropriations Committee refused yesterday to approve a $250,000 appropriation for the Byrd Antarctic expedition, but members said that sufficient money would be provided, when needed, to bring it home.

The committee report on the $119,071,187 Interior Department supply bill, from which the Byrd funds were withheld, said the committee had been misinformed last year as to how long it would be necessary to provide funds. A total of $350,000 already has been given the expedition.

Johnson Question Profits

Before the committee acted on the bill, which the House will consider today, Representative Johnson (Democrat), of Oklahoma, told a subcommittee that Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd stood to "make a personal fortune" out of the Antarctic venture. Johnson asked Lieut. Comdr. Robert A. J. English, secretary of the Antarctic Services executive committee:

"Has Admiral Byrd some advertising and radio contracts from which he expected to make a fabulous sum of money out of this expedition?"

"No, sir," English replied. "I am pleased to have the opportunity now to remove that impression . . ."

Johnson exhibited a full-page newspaper advertisement with a picture of members of the expedition smoking a certain brand of cigarettes. He said it quoted Byrd as saying "Slow burning —— cigarettes are a favorite with us. You can be sure we have plenty."

Special Dog Food, Too

"I am advised that a requisition was made for a certain brand of dog food, although the Government was called upon to pay for 35 tons of dog food amounting to $2,646," Johnson continued. "The amount was 'cancelled' and a donation of 35 tons of a 'certain brand' was made . . ."

He declared that "certain brands" of various other products had been ordered for the expedition.

English quoted a Presidential order directing Byrd to prohibit all expedition members from furnishing any outsiders with copies of any diary, chart, memorandum, photograph or other information about the expedition.

"It is highly important that no journal or narrative of the enterprise, either partial or complete, should be published without the authority and under the supervision of the Government of the United States, at whose expense this service is undertaken," the President wrote.

Woll Fears Depression At War's End

Trade Pact May Bring Perilous Competition, He Tells Senate Unit

By the Associated Press

Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, told the Senate Finance Committee yesterday that operation of the reciprocal trade program might expose the United States to "depressing competition" after the end of the European war.

Saying that he did not speak for the A. F. L., but for America's Wage Earners Protective Conference, an organization of some A. F. L. unions, Woll told the committee:

"Should the war come to an end tomorrow we could not escape the depressing consequences of general demobilization and the ensuing unemployment."

He argued that the Hull trade program, which the House already has voted to extend, created a dependence upon foreign markets which put the United States at the mercy of world trade conditions.

L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange, repeated his arguments against extension of the act.

Alfred C. Gaunt, of Methuen, Mass., chairman of the National Advisory Council of Independent Small Business, testified that "it is, generally speaking, the small business industries that are hardest hit by these treaties."

President of Merrimac Mills, he said that 94 per cent of the country's 400 woolen mills were small and medium-sized and that almost one-third of those in existence ten years ago had failed.

"And the further shock of a renewal of these low-tariff treaties," he added, "will put out of business many more."

Alan G. Goldsmith, of New York, vice president of the National Paperboard Association and of the Mead Corporation, said the Hull program had resulted in reduction of duties on 75 per cent of the output of the billion-dollar paper and paperboard industry, to the advantage of foreign producers.

19 AFL Unions To Take Trust Fight to Hill

Building Trades Heads Plan Round of Calls On Capitol Leaders

By the United Press

Presidents of 19 A. F. L. building trades unions yesterday accused the Justice Department of practicing "reactionary doctrine" at its very worst and agreed to carry direct to Congress their fight against the department's antitrust prosecutions of labor organizations.

Meeting here to form a "united front" against the department's drive, which has resulted in return of 65 indictments against 556 defendants, including 39 unions and 110 union officials, the union presidents decided to have A. F. of L. leaders from each State visit the Capitol today to enlist Congressional aid for a counter campaign.

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, in charge of the antitrust division, has directed the campaign on the grounds that the unions have conspired illegally to maintain prices and to prevent free operations in the construction industry.

Summarizing the department's contentions, the A. F. L. statement said it "claims before the courts that the Sherman law is as applicable to labor as to capital, notwithstanding that the contrary was the almost-universally accepted interpretation when that act was passed . . . that the Clayton Act is meaningless and ineffective . . . that labor is back just where it was before any remedial and protective legislation had been enacted . . ."

"These claims of the Department of Justice, if successful, mean the end of freedom of organized labor and endanger its very existence, as well as democracy itself."

This is the standard price tag used by General Motors dealers to show what makes up the prices of new cars delivered to customers. "PRICE OF CAR" means the price we charge for the car itself, including reimbursement for Federal Tax and conditioning—"TRANSPORTATION CHARGE" means a charge for transportation from factory to you, based on rail rates—"OPTIONAL EQUIPMENT AND ACCESSORIES" means the charge for any extra equipment or accessories you elect to buy.

It is, but once you've studied it over, you have the complete story on the price you pay.

It brings right out into the open the charges that occasion the difference between advertised at-the-factory delivered prices, and the delivered prices you pay here in your home town.

You can see how much you are being charged for transportation of the car from the factory to you, based on rail rates—how much for any extra equipment or accessories that you may elect to buy.

We General Motors dealers are marking every car on our showroom floors with this "plainview" price tag, to enable you more completely to measure the values we offer.

The merit of the cars themselves is plain to see — their good looks and good workmanship are reflected in every detail.

Yet value is always relative — it necessarily involves not only the price you pay but what that price includes—and this is true irrespective of what car you buy.

So keep this tag in mind when you're pricing cars, and if you encounter charges not listed here or that you don't understand, you're forewarned and can do your own policing.

We invite you to look over the stunning new 1940 General Motors cars we're now showing—on every count of size, utility, style and finish they reach a new high.

Examine their features. Check their quality, point by point. Then consider the price tag. Thus you can appraise for yourself their outstanding value and see exactly what your money buys.

Ship Chased By Submarine In Atlantic

Sends S O S 900 Miles East of Virgin Islands; U-Boat Bombed at Base

By the Associated Press

New York, March 4.—Mackay Radio announced tonight the receipt of messages from the 5,841-ton British steamer El Ciervo reporting she was being "chased by a submarine," at 3:07 p. m. (Eastern standard time).

Her position was given as 22:10 north, 51:28 west, about 900 miles east of the Virgin Islands and well outside the neutrality zone.

The announcement lent new support to reports that German submarines were operating off the West Indies.

The 4,862-ton British freighter Southgate reported last Friday that she had been attacked by a submarine about 140 miles northeast of Puerto Rico. When United States Navy planes sighted the Southgate Saturday she was undamaged.

United States Coast Guardsmen in Puerto Rico said last night, however, that they believed the Southgate would confirm reports of the attack when she reaches port. Her wireless has been silent, apparently, to keep secret her position.

U-Boat Bombed at Base

By the Associated Press

London, March 4.—The air ministry announced tonight a British plane had bomb and probably sunk a German U-boat in Schillig Roads, in Helgoland Bight at the mouth of the Elbe River.

One of four bombs registered a direct hit between conning tower and stern, the air ministry said.

"After the attack the submarine was seen enveloped in smoke, with only the upper part of its conning tower visible above the water, said the ministry.

"The aircraft was on reconnaissance duty."

This claim tended to balance additional losses to British and neutral shipping reported during the day. A large British tanker was torpedoed, a British trawler sunk by a mine, a Swedish steamer sunk in the North Sea, presumably by a mine, and a Dutch coastal vessel sunk by air bombs. Another Dutch steamer was missing

British Claim Advantage

An admiralty communique tonight said that only 1,886 tons of British shipping were known to be lost between February 26 and March 3, while four German ships totaling 18,490 tons were scuttled to avoid capture.

These figures do not include neutral ships sunk or British ships like the S. S. Domala, bombed and machinegunned with 108 dead.

The communique further contended that only 25 out of 10,782 British, Allied and neutral vessels convoyed by Allied warships in the first six months of war were lost.

Today's biggest maritime casualty was the 10,516-ton tanker Charles F. Meyer, which sent an S O S saying "we are sinking," after she had been torpedoed 50 miles southeast of Hastings in the English Channel.

The 156-ton Scottish trawler Ben Attow was lost today with a crew of nine in an explosion off the Scottish east coast.

Neutral Casualties Listed

Today's list of neutral casualties included:

The 2,818-ton Swedish steamer Lagaholm, sunk by undisclosed cause, crew of 27 rescued.

The Dutch coastal vessel Elziena, bombed by a German plane in the North Sea, 2 killed, 3 rescued after spending 36 hours on a raft.

The Dutch Rijnstroom, 695 tons, missing since leaving the British contraband port at The Downs five days ago. Nothing had been heard of the crew of 12, but wreckage and an empty lifeboat from the ship were found.

In addition, the captain of the 458-ton Dutch Deruyter said a plane had dropped three bombs near his ship in the North Sea Saturday night. Two other Dutch ships, the Sint Annaland, 2,248 tons, and the Schieland, 2,249 tons, reported yesterday they were machine-gunned by planes in the North Sea Friday.

Rescue Ship Attacked

At Amsterdam it was reported that two other small Netherlands ships, the Boekeloo and Amazone, had been machine-gunned Friday night by a foreign plane. No one was hudt and no damage done.

Moreover, a German plane was disclosed to have bombed and machine-gunned the Dutch freighter Jonge Willem before the ship went to the aid of the British Domala Saturday.

Questioned about reports the Domala was armed, the admiralty answered it was unable to say.

Bulgarian Guards Killed in Clash With Rumanians

Bucharest, March 4 (U.P.).—Two Bulgarian frontier guards were killed and two Rumanian soldiers were wounded today in a frontier shooting incident near Chili-Kadi.

A considerable number of Bulgarian and Rumanian armed forces were involved.

A joint Bulgarian-Rumanian commission was appointed immediately to investigate. Relations between Rumania and Bulgaria have been strained since conclusion of the Balkan war of 1913, when Rumania received the former Bulgarian territory of South Dobruja.

London Times Urges Britain To Save Finns

Paper's Closeness To Conservative Party Lends Plea Importance

By International News Service

London (Tuesday), March 5.—A declaration that the "whole sentiment" of Great Britain demands that Finland be svaed from conquest by Russia was published today in an editorial in the Times, of London.

The statement was regarded as significant because of the close connection between the Times and the Conservative Party, led by Prime Minister Chamberlain.

The Times editorial lauded the Finnish defense of Viipuri and added:

"It is becoming clearer daily that the Finnish war is no side issue. . . .

'Our interests are clear. There is a moral issue involved, as well as a material.

The whole sentiment of this country demands that Finland be not allowed to fall."

Assails "False Economy"

The newspaper called for speedy action if Britain is to increase her aid to Finland. Th eeditorial continued:

"Our own cause is buttressed by Finnish resistance against evil and tyranny and they are entitled to gratitude and recompense. There is now no time to waste in debate.

"As we look back on the annals of old wars we are constantly struck by the opportunities missed through a policy of false economy and the failure to appreciate the comparative unimportance of secondary risks.

"The Gallipoli campaign of the World War is an outstanding instance. Let us not prepare for ourselves once more the melancholy task of discussing lost chances."

Some Help Sent

Britain and France already have allocated large quantities of munitions and equipment to Finland, and are encouraging volunteers to join the International Brigade in Finland. However, there has been little important consideration of an Allied expeditionary force to aid the Finns, particularly in view of the announcements by Sweden and Norway that they would not permit Allied armies to cross their territories.

There has been conjecture that the dismissal of War Secretary Leslie Hore-Belisha from the cabinetet early in January was occasioned, at leastin part, by his advocacy of greater help to the Finns. Since leaving the cabinet, Hore-Belishah as openly pleaded for such aid.

There are indications, however, that eager as are Britain and France to help the Finns, they are held back by the fear that open assistance, and the resultant break with Soviet Russia, might push Russia and Germany even closer together.

Kermit Roosevelt Appeals For Recruits Against 'Infidel'

Commander of International Brigade For Finland Calls Russia 'More Mighty Than Greatest Tyrants of the Past'

By Frank R. Kelley.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, March 4.—Col. Kermit Roosevelt, American commander of the British contingent of the International Brigade for Finland, appealed over a network of the British Broadcasting Corporation tonight for recruits to join his expeditions "against the hell which Stalin and Hitler are seeking to create on this earth."

Recalling the religious crusades in which Britons fought abroad nine hundred years ago, he said that today "an infidel, Russia, more mighty and more powerful than the greatest tyrants of the past, is persecuting and destroying the people whose faith and ideals are the same as yours or mine.

"This modern infidel," he added, "does not use the sword or lance; he uses bombing planes, tanks, machine guns and every other weapon which modern science has devised. He kills men and women and children for no other reason than that they fight to defend the right to live in freedom in the land of their fathers: to think, speak and live in freedom in the land of their fathers; worship as a free and independent people."

"Force of Evil"

Col. Roosevelt asserted that it was not a question of combatting "the mere words" of fascism and communism, but "what threatens the world today is the force of evil; that is what the defense of Finland means to me."

Discussing the British volunteers whom he will command in the north within a few weeks, Col. Roosevelt declared: "These men are neither red nor white; they are not Communists or capitalists; they are not in the pay of landowners or bankers; they are not moved by any political interests . . . They are mature men and experienced men from all walks of life . . .

"It is our belief that we go to fight not for Finland, but for the whole of the civilized world. It is our belief that no man can have a higher purpose."

Canadians Volunteer

Copyright by New York Times

Toronto, March 4.—A volunteer force of 250 Finns and 750 Canadians will leave for Finland in the near future, according to announcement made here today.

Organizers of the force are Col. Fraser Hunter, a member of the Ontario Legislature, and Eislo Lachstrom, chairman of the Finnish War Veterans Association of Toronto.

Lachstrom said today that approximately 12 men a day have been departing for Finland for some time. The 250 Finns now assembled will be ready to sail later this month. They expect to be joined by about 200 more from the United States.

"Go Back Home" Is Plea

New York, March 4 (AP).—A "go-back-home" plea to hundreds of young Americans who have volunteered to fight for Finland was voiced today by Jallu Honkonen, secretary of the Finnish War Veterans of America.

Hankonen said they had been attracted by reports that a Scandinavian group here was making arrangements with Canadian officials for volunteers without passports to enter Canada, ship to Norway or Sweden and thence go to Finland.

"Without passports, they are not eligible to fight for Finland," he said.

Honkonen said a detachment of 500 volunteers with passports would sail March 22. Most of them, he said, were Finnish-Americans.

Deportations From Old Reich Discontinued

Official Repercussions Follow Sending of 1,100 To Exile in Poland

By Percival Knauth

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, March 4.—The most recent case of the deportation of German Jews to Poland, which took place February 20 when 1,100 Jews from Stettin were summarily evacuated, apparently has had official repercussions.

It is learned from reliable sources that deportations from the Old Reich territory have been stopped by order of the highest authorities—an order which is in conformity with the repeated assurances given to Jewish organizations that Jews in the Old Reich would not be included in deportation measures.

This order apparently was inspired by a protest made by officials of the general government in Poland, in whose jurisdiction the Jewish reservation southeast of Lublin is included. The Jews from Stettin are said to have found the existing barracks so badly overcrowded and the food and sanitary arrangements so inadequate that local German officials refused to take the responsibility for any further transports.

The 1,100 have not been sent back to their homes nor has any definite word regarding their future been received.

The original order for deportation of Jews from Stettin was given by Stettin officials without consulting Berlin.

Preparations already had been made for the deportation of the 700 Jews living in the Province of Pomerania. They, like the Jews in the cities of Frankfurt-on-Oder, Guben and Landsberg, now have been told that they will not be deported to Poland but must nevertheless leave Germany within a certain time.

The last transports of deported Jews were said to have been bound for the San River territory south of Lublin. In this district, likewise, Jews from the Austrian protectorate were brought in large scale deportations last November.

Britain Stands Pat in Italian Coal Dispute

New Cabinet Shakeup Hinted; Air Minister May Go; Eden in Favor

By the Associated Press

London, March 4.—Punished hard at sea and involved in her first important dispute of the war with nonbelligerent Italy, Great Britain stood diplomatically pat tonight in her determination to blockade Italy's German coal supplies while London buzzed with predictions of a cabinet reshuffle.

These occurrences were not directly connected, but they were component parts of what First Lord of the Admiralty Winston Churchill has called "this hard and novel war at sea."

The Italian protest over the coal blockade recalled in its vehemence the furore between the two nations over proposed League of Nations sanctions against Italy for her invasion of Ethiopia. Great Britain backed down that time, but tonight foreign office sources indicated there was little chance she would waive her "rights and interests under international law" and permit Germany to continue shipping coal by sea to her nonfighting partner in the prewar axis.

The foreign office felt its hands had been strengthened by what it called Germany's "indiscriminate" warfare at sea—by planes, submarines and mines—in the last week.

It was made clear Italy's protest would receive "rapid and careful consideration." Yet authorized authorized spokesman contended Italy had been allowed a breathing spell to adjust her imports after Britain decided to block German exports last autumn, and took the position that Whitehall feels it has done everything possible to smooth the way for Italy in the present dispute. Any backward step, it was contended, would endanger the whole structure of the British blockade.

Reports of a cabinet shuffle had it that Sir Kingsley Wood, air minister, was ripe for dismissal and that Minister of Supply Leslie Burgin and Lord Hankey, minister without portfolio, also might go. At the same time the name of Anthony Eden was heard in authoritative circles as the "coming man."

Eden Popularity Rising

Eden's popularity with all classes and parties has increased since he re-entered the cabinet as dominions secretary nearly two years after he had gone out as foreign secretary in revolt over Prime Minister Chamberlain's efforts to appease both Italy and Germany.

Sir Kingsley Wood not only has been the target of much blunt criticism over the deadening completeness of the nightly blackout—he also has been at odds with the other fighting services over control of British air units.

At start of the war the army and navy protested vigorously over continuation of a separate air force; since then a number of fighters and bombers have been transferred to both services. However, the admiralty still desires that coastal defense squadrons be placed under its command. The R. A. F. controls these.

A more recent complaint has been that Sir Kingslev has held down aircraft production for fear the planes would become obsolete.

Times Forecasts Changes

Burgin's office has been attacked by organized labor and in Commons for some time. Now he has announced dismissal of two ministry officials and a liaison officer without giving any reason for his decision.

The supply minister places orders to the value of $54,000,000 every week. Burgin has been questioned in Commons about commissions paid for placing contracts and about contractors "believing they had a special line of approach to the minister."

Lord Hankey also has been under discussion. Today Chamberlain declined to answer a Commons query on just what Lord Hankey did with his time.

The London Times, which foreshadows events in Britain with almost uncanny regularity, acknowledged this morning that the affairs of the country had been in the hnads of an "experimental" cabinet and said it was a "certainty" there would be changes, "in time."

Viipuri's defenders were still standing their ground.

(The Russian high command announced early today the Red army had occupied Saarela, north of Viipuri, and the fortified island of Tuppuran, 15 miles to the south, but did not mention fighting in the immediate environs of the city.)

The Finns gave little detail of the fighting north of Lake Ladoga, which they said was continuing, except to report that the Russian attacks were concentrated in the Pitkaranta area.

In the far north the fighting was centered around Nautsi, about 60 miles from the Arctic coast. The Finns said the Russians had been driven back about 2 miles.

The Finns said their air force had bombed "enemy columns and sites of assembly" during yesterday's fighting, and that four Russian planes had been shot down in raids.

New York, March 4.—The United States liner Washington arrived here today with 625 passengers, including two economists on an Allied governmental mission, the last of the 600 Mormon missionaries who were in Europe when the war broke out, an international banker, and a mother and child who were on a liner destroyed by mines.

In addition there was a French ballet impresario, a young motion picture actor, a British woman novelist, a number of American businessmen and more than 300 German refugees.

The economists were Frank Trelawney Arthur Ashton-Gwatkin, an adviser on policy to the British ministry of economic warfare, and Charles Rist, a former deputy governor of the Bank of France, now an adviser to the French ministry of blockade.

Leave for Washington

They are here to assist in reducing friction between this country and Britain and France arising from the blockade.

They will give American authorities full information concerning the functioning of the blockade, receive United States suggestions for reducing difficulties, and assist in establishing measures to avoid infringing on neutral rights.

They left immediately for Washington, where they will assist the British and French ambassadors. Ashton-Gwatkin was a member of the Runciman mission to Czecho-Slovakia.

The five Mormon missionaries left Europe with regret. There were 15,000 Mormons in Germany, they said, 2,000 in France and many more in other European countries.

The international banker was Count J. Van Limburg Stirum, of Holland, who said he had come over here to reorganize his business and to get it settled for a long war. He said he would specialize in buying French merchandise which can't be used for home consumption and selling it here.

Picked Up by Trawler

The mother and child were Mrs. Evelyn Russell Marriott and her 4-year-old daughter, Sally. They were aboard the Simon Bolivar which was destroyed by a mine on November 18.

"When the explosion occurred, I went up in the air like a rocket," said Mrs. Marriott. "I thought all my bones were broken. Someone put a lifebelt on me and threw me in the ocean. I was picked up by a British trawler."

The French impresario was Rene Blum, manager of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, and brother of Leon Blum, former premier of France.

The young actor was 22-year-old John Justin, who is about to make his motion picture debut in Alexander Korda's film, "The Thief of Bagdad," and who obtained a two months' leave from the R. A. F. to attend the premiere here. The novelist was Pamela Frankau, daughter of Gilbert Frankau, who described her last novel, "Appointment With Death," as a "political thriller."

to Lake Constance.

The Swiss high command tonight ordered more than 60,000 frontier troops and territorial reserves to rejoin their units Wednesday, three days ahead of a scheduled remobilization of the nation's armed forces.

Numerous aerial feints across Western Front lines gave indications of the rival commands' alert watch on each other for a hint of springtime action in Europe's often momentous month of March.

Seven victories in the sharpened aerial activity were reported by the Allies. British and French air forces each claimed two German planes Saturday, with one more reported "certainly" to have been brought down by the British and two more "probably" by the French.

On the ground, the French reported they met German patrol action with an ambush in the Wissembourgh Gap on the eastern flank of the front where a German squad was trapped and several taken prisoner.

The French reported they repulsed a German assault on two advance posts in the Nied River sector near the center of the front.

(The German communique said seven French soldiers were captured between the Saar River and the Palatinate Forest, and two others "at another spot.")

The war ministry today instructed young men born between July 1 and September 30, 1919, to report for regular two-year military service April 10.

Madrid, March 4.—The nationalist government has begun to sound out United States bankers on credit for 100,000 more bales of cotton, it was learned today.

Textile mills in Barcelona have been enabled to resume operations by the arrival of 170,000 out of 250,000 bales of American cotton provided for under the credit arranged last summer.

six old submarines stationed there. Naval officers said with this force only two can be kept on patrol at a time. The Navy has only 58 submersibles in active service and demands elsewhere have prevented canal reinforcement.

There are 28 "S" and "R" boats of World War vintage laid up at Philadelphia, however, which could be put in commission if funds are made available. Money for reconditioning is in estimates now before Congress.

The Navy wants to establish an additional submarine base at the Pacific entrance to the canal to supplement the one at Coco Solo on the Atlantic side. Recommendation for such a base was made last year by the Hepburn board on naval bases, but Congress has not yet been asked to authorize it.

Japan Seeks Understanding With Allies

Stalemate With U. S. Turns Nipponese To France, Britain

By Hugh Byas.

Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, March 4.—While Japan's relations with the United States continue at a stalemate, Japanese diplomacy is turning toward an understanding with Britain and France.

British Ambassador Craigie saw the vice foreign minister, Masayuki Tani again today and discussed the Tientsin silver question as well as matters connected with the British blockade of German trade.

Japan has hitherto demanded that Britain turn over the approximately $50,000,000 in Chinese government reserves now held in Tientsin. It is now proposed to devote a substantial part to relief among the Chinese people and hold the remainder in joint British-Japanese custody pending a final settlement. The British government is said to be willing provided the Chungking government agrees.

French Talks Planned

The foreign office today announced that Japan desired amelioration of relations with France and would open conversations to this end in Paris and Tokyo. The Japanese bombings of the French-owned Yunnan railway have evoked strong protests from France and the French government has allowed a temporary trade agreement to expire.

The Japan Times tonight forecasts great changes in Japan's relations with Britain and France.

It points out that while the European war lasts, Britain and France must preserve tranquillity in the Far East. The Japanese government is equally anxious to effect a settlement in China through the establishment of Wang Ching-Wei's new central government.

British Aid May Be Asked

It is necessary that the peace terms should make good the Japanese government's repeated undertakings to respect China's independence. If such a peace is offered, it is hoped that the British government will employ its influence on Chungking against the continuance of useless warfare.

Protest Indicates Fascists May Side With Reich in War

ically with Germany. That is why the British are so worried. They do not know how seriously to take this protest. It may be a turning point in the war, with Italy starting to get off the fence and down on the German side.

It may be a bid for a compromise. The British apparently are going to make the concession of letting the colliers now in Rotterdam through, thus clearing the port of all the German coal destined for Italy. Reports thus far coming in say that the vessels, which have already left Rotterdam, have not been molested. The newspapers also carry reports that two months' grace will be granted to give Italy a chance to get the amount of coal which would have come through the Danube and Black Sea if the river had not frozen prematurely. A total of 500,000 tons is suggested. (This report was denied in London.)

One of the things which particularly worries the British is the implied threat to denounce the Italo-British accord. This is contained in a paragraph which says, "In particular, the Fascist government desires to place the greatest possible emphasis on the illegitimacy and gravity of the decision taken by the British government . . . the British government knows that the coal in question represents an immutable necessity to the life and work of the Italian people. Such being the case, the measure . . . is such as to disturb and compromise the economic and political relations between Italy and Great Britain, which were established by the accord of April 16, 1938."

In international diplomacy, this is language of considerable force and gravity. Certainly a denunciation of the treaty would create a state of unpleasant tension.

Thus the issue is joined openly and on a problem which is truly vital to Italy. She must get coal and she must get it by sea, because there is not enough rolling stock to get it by land from Germany without counting the vast difference it makes in cost.

Archduke Otto Will Inspect U. S.

Canada to recruit a legion of Austrian refugees to fight on the Franco-British front in the European war.

"Central Europe must unite for its peace and preservation," he said, speaking of his favorite project, a Danubian federation. "But we do not ask for material support from America. American sympathy is enough."

"Do you hope, then, for eventual restoration of the Austrian throne?" he was asked.

"Any way I answer that, I appear to make personal propaganda," he answered with a flashing smile, "and I do not wish to make personal propaganda on this trip."

This was a shame in one sense, since the archduke would make as pleasing a personal propagandist as your correspondent has ever seen. His dream prince exterior, including naturally curly brown hair brushed back from his Hapsburg forehead, long-lashed brown eyes and a dashing, guardsman moustache, presents to the American public the most pleasing Graustarkian facade since the early visits of the Duke of Windsor, nee Prince of Wales.

That exterior rose superior tonight to his rumpled, travel-stained white shirt, with its soft collar; his wrinkled brown suit of inexpensive fabric and indifferent cut; his necktie, which seemed the probable yuletide gift of a maiden aunt, and his black oxfords, in need of a shine.

His imperial highness put on no side with the reporters who interviewed him, or with the photographers who bossed him about. He seemed a nice home boy in need of a good night's sleep and some fresh linen.

He will have to put on that fresh linen unaided by a valet, for the archduke is traveling light on this trip and with a distinctly nonregal entourage.

It consists only of his brother, Archduke Felix, 24, who has been in America since September, and of his personal aide and friend, young Count Franz von Trauttmandorff. The latter accompanied him on his clipper flight across the Atlantic.

Otto said he and Count von Trauttmansdorff would remain here three weeks or a month, and that he would like to stay longer, but felt it necessary to return home because "it is possible that there will be some development requiring my presence in Europe."

He did not explain what sort of development he expected, merely adding that "the European situation is such that I should be back in a few weeks."

"I would be very glad to see President Roosevelt," he responded to a question. "But I have no appointment. I hope that I shall be permitted to see him."

Text of Italian Note to Britain on Coal

By the Associated Press

Rome, March 4.—Following is the text of the Italian government's protest to Great Britain over the British blockade of seaborne German coal shipments to Italy:

The Fascist government refers to the communication of the British government according to which every ship loaded with coal from Germany which leaves a port of loading after March 1 is subject to measures of control.

In the face of such a measure, which seriously injures Italian interests, the Fascist government renews in firmest terms the protest and reserves already formulated against the principles involved in the British government's dispositions for economic warfare and for the ways in which these are applied to nonbelligerent states.

Measures taken by the British government in this field appear to be, and are, contrary to the letter and spirit of international law which establishes within well-defined limits the rights of belligerents in order to safeguard the interests of third states and the liberty of their legitimate commerce.

Other Measures Cited

Having regard to international law to which, in effect, it is manifestly abusive, it is the practice to subject all maritime traffic of nonbelligerent countries to control frequently vexatious, to demand from them onerous and excessive documentation incompatible with the normal secrecy of commercial dealings, to raise to a rule the rerouting and detention of merchant ships for days and weeks in control ports, causing very serious damage to equipment, to regularity of service and movement of traffic and so hindering, limiting and frequently paralyzing supplies of nonbelligerent countries with immediate and direct repercussions on industry and labor.

Provisions in force regarding merchandise declared "contraband" eliminate, in practice, the distinction between absolute and conditional contraband. This contrasts with international law which, by distinction, makes possible assuring normal trade for the requirements of civil life. Interception of mail bags on high seas and censorship of correspondence, even when from Italians to Italians, constitutes a flagrant violation of postal secrecy which the eleventh Hague convention of 1907 intended explicitly to guarantee.

The provisions of the measure of November 28 which strike at export of German merchandise destined for neutral countries are particularly incompatible with fundamental principles of international law and, in particular, with the Declaration of Paris of April 16, 1856.

To Fix Responsibility

Whatever may be the motives which inspired such measures they in no wise make legitimate the diminution of the rights of nonbelligerent powers. The aforesaid measure presents an extreme seriousness from the point of view of its economic repercussions in that its application disturbs profoundly the mechanism of international exchange, present sources of supply and reduces the opportunities of production of nonbelligerent states.

In particular, the Fascist government wishes to place in clearest light the illegality and gravity of the decision taken by the British government to subject to control the importation by Italy by sea of coal of German origin. The British government knows the coal in question meets an indispensable need in the life and labor of the Italian people.

Under such conditions, the measure taken by the British government is of a kind to disturb and compromise the economic and political relations established between Italy and Britain by the accord of April 16, 1938.

The Fascist government, while renewing its formal protest, intends to note precisely from this moment, data and factual elements of the situation to show the responsibility for any future development arising out of it.

High Court Backs NLRB On Contracts

Rules Agreements May Be Abrogated If Unfair to Labor

By International News Service

The National Labor Relations Board may legally abrogate individual contracts between employers and employes when the contracts constitute unfair labor practices, the Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

In an opinion written by Justice Stone, the court invalidated contracts between the National Licorice Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y., and its individual employes.

The court also agreed to review a controversy over whether the Interstate Commerce Commission or the wage-hour administrator has jurisdiction to prescribe the maximum working hours of certain motor carrier employes.

Washington Group Sues

A suit was brought by the American Trucking Association, of Washington, and others subject to the Motor Carrier Act of 1935, to compel the I. C. C. to hold hearings and prescribe maximum working hours. The I. C. C. disclaimed jurisdiction and in this stand was supported by the wage-hour division of the Labor Department, which asserted jurisdiction.

The Federal District Court of the District of Columbia, from which the ICC appealed, ruled that the ICC had jurisdiction over all employes of firms subject to the motor carrier act except those whose duties do not affect the safety of motor vehicle operation.

In the Labor Board case, the Supreme Court upheld the board's order to the company to break its individual bargaining contracts with 118 employes. Its ruling effected a minor modification in the board order, regarding the posting of a notice by the company, that the contracts were in violation of the Wagner act and were of no effect.

Contracts Barred Strikes

The board charged the corporation exercised an antiunion technique devised by L. L. Balleisen, of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, under which employers allegedly would refuse to sign union contracts, insisting instead upon contracts with individual workmen.

These individual contracts prohibited strikes, and barred workmen from entering signed agreements with unions.

The court yesterday agreed to review a circuit court decision holding that children have a right to refuse to salute the American flag at the opening of school exercises. The litigation involved validity of a resolution adopted by the Minersville, Pa., school board.

The court consented to pass on a circuit court decision which refused to enjoin the Appalachian Electric Power Co. from constructing a dam on the New River near Radford, Va., without a license from the Federal Power Commission. The Fourth Circuit Court held the river was not an interstate navigable stream and hence the Federal agency lacked regulatory jurisdiction.

Three Suspects Released

Meanwhile, the robbery squad, under Lieut. John Fowler, seized 16 men in an effort to solve the recent series of holdups and the murder by bandits of a Northeast liquor store proprietor. Three suspects were released after questioning, while the others were held for a line-up tonight.

Purse snatchings last night included Mrs. Nellie V. Wilmer, 60, of 2010 Otis street northeast, $6.10 and a railway pass in the 2400 block of Newton street northeast; Mary L. Craven, 18, of 534 First stret southeast, 13 cents and jewelry in the first block of E street southeast.

T pickpocket collected $455, travelers' checks and a gold coin from Edward Myer, of Glenn Dale Sanitarium, in a downtown theater.

Robbed by burglars were Force Girls School, 1711 Massachusetts avenue northwest, $50 from rooms of three students; station of the Fourth Engine Company, Fireman Clarence J. Short lost a pair of hip boots; a meat truck owned by a Baltimore packing firm, robbed at Third and O streets northwest of a box of meat valued at $15.

Sen. Glass Easy, Vallee Tough, 'Autograph King' Declares

Wish to Meet Lily Pons Started Former Bank Clerk on Hobby Which Was Climaxed by Man of War Hoofprint

The "autograph king"—who got one with a smile from Senator Glass but had difficulty wangling one from Rudy Vallee (the two biggest surprises of his career)—descended on Washington yesterday to get others. His technique to date has netted him 2,038, including the hoofprint of Man 'o War.

Edwin A. Rowlands, former clerk in the Mellon National Bank, Pittsburgh, said he got the urge on February 1, 1935, when he saw Lily Pons' picture in a paper. Wanting to meet her, he decided on an approach in the guise of an autograph collector.

He developed the technique accidentally. Getting a collector's book, he pasted in Miss Pons' picture. She was pleased, on seeing it. Others would react, likewise, the bank clerk found. It was pleasant. He drew $3,200, his life savings, from the bank and hit the road.

Now he lectures, which helps pay his way, on the value of a hobby. All in all, he works about three hours a day. He doesn't even have to lug his autograph books, numbering four, around. The insurance company, having a $12,000 stake in them, permits him to carry only one at a time.

Someone told him, he said, that Senator Glass might not look on autograph seekers agreeably. Anyhow, Rowlands pursued him across the Capitol lawn. "He was very nice about it. I handed him my pen and he wrote, or scratched along. I was horrified when I saw no name appearing. The pen had run dry.

"But a girl came by and I stopped her. She had a pen. It went off all right."

On the other hand Vallee "squawked," Rowland said. "He was the most difficult." The trainer of Man 'o War was suspicious. But when he saw his great horse's photograph flatteringly in the book, he raised the animal's right front foot. "I also have the paw mark of Ginger, Admiral Byrd's great sledge dog," Rowland boasted.

He is planning to go afted Henry Ford, thinking a new technique may be necessary there.

SEC Orders Integration For Cities Service

By the Associated Press

The Securities Commission ordered integration plans today from the $837,616,000 United Gas Improvement Co. and the $422,595,000 Cities Service Power & Light Co., and their affiliates.

The orders were similar to those issued last week for the Electric Band & Share Co. and the Engineers Public Service Co.

The two new orders require the companies to show by April 12 how their properties would be reshuffled to meet the so-called "death sentence" provision of the 1935 Holding Company Act.

The act requires utility holding company systems to be integrated into geographic units and simplified in their corporate structure. Similar orders are to be issued to the Middle West Corporation, the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, Standard Power & Light Corporation, the North American Co. and the United Light & Power Co.

D.C. Boys, 13, 14, On Expedition To Parts Unknown

Two Washington boys, with a capital of 83 cents, last night were on an expedition to parts unknown despite eloquent pleas of the brother of one.

Thomas Murray, 13, of 1305 Lawrence street northeast, a student at St. John's High School, and Joseph Fox, 14, of 1233 Lawrence street, who attends St. Anthony's School, are the wanderers. They were accompanied as far as the railway tracks in Takoma Park, Md., by Frank Murray, who tried to dissuade them.

Dr. J. L. B. Murray, Thomas' father, said his son gave Frank a note to their mother, which Frank destroyed. Dr. Murray said the note gave no indication of where the boys intended going.

U. S. Delegates Reach Cracow To Allocate Aid

Two to Cooperate With Reich Red Cross In Polish Relief

To arrange distribution of eight carloads of medical supplies and warm clothing from the United States to Polish people, Wayne Chatfield-Taylor and James T. Nicholson arrived yesterday in Krakow, it was announced here by the Red Cross.

The German government has given assurance that these supplies will not be claimed by military authorities, the Red Cross said.

Chatfield-Taylor and Nicholson, remaining in Krakow for two weeks, will cooperate with the German Red Cross in allocating the supplies to six or more Polish agencies including Jewish groups. The supplies will be distributed in the Warsaw, Lublin, Radom and Krakow areas.

The District Chapter of the Red Cross yesterday shipped 9,678 surgical dressings to the British Red Cross and the Order of St. John, England.

Work is well under way on the initial quota of 43,800 surgical dressings for Finland. The planning committee, headed by Mrs. Reginald Huidekoper, has accepted the quota.

In February 500 volunteers worked more than 3,000 hours.

Dr. Benjamin I. Weininger, of the Montgomery County General Hospital, Sandy Spring, will address the Sherwood Parent-Teacher Association at Sherwood High School, Sandy Spring, tonight. "Mental Hygiene" will be his topic. A general discussion will follow.

Civil Liberties Union Acts To Oust Communist Member

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, March 4.—The board of directors of the American Civil Liberties Union formally resolved today to oust Elizabeth Gurley Flynn from the board's membership because of her affiliation with the Communist Party.

Miss Flynn, one of the founders of the union and present at today's meeting, flatly refused to resign on the ground that she could see no impropriety, she said, in a member of the Communist Party sitting on the board of the union.

Walter Frank, vice chairman of the board, who presided at today's meeting, informed Miss Flynn that, in view of her refusal to resign voluntarily, charges would be made against her at a special hearing of the board March 18 and steps then would be taken for her formal expulsion.

Only Communist Member

The board took action today against Miss Flynn in accordance with a resolution adopted by the union February 5 in which the union held it "inappropriate for any person to serve on the governing committees or on its staff who is a member of any political organization which supports totalitarian dictatorship in any country or who by his public declarations indicates his support of such a principle."

The vote to request Miss Flynn to resign was favored by a substantial majority of the 30 board members present at the meeting.

Miss Flynn is the sole Communist on the board; William Z. Foster, former Communist candidate for President, who was an A. F. of L. organizer when he joined the union and later its board, withdrew many years ago.

Ward Resignation Accepted

Miss Flynn, who became well known in the last two decades as a labor organizer, has never minced words on her association with the Communist Party, declaring on February 21, "I spend most of my waking hours declaiming for the Communist Party." She joined the Communist Party 15 years after the A. C. L. U. was founded, the union said.

The board also accepted the resignation from the union of Dr. Harry F. Ward, who had resigned his chairmanship of the national committee and the board on February 5. He severed his connection in protest at the union's antitotalitarian and anti-Communist resolution, which, he declared, "sets up tests of opinions for services on the governing bodies of the union."

Ward was succeeded as chairman by the Rev. John Haynes Holmes.

Those Big Red Wagons Are Headed This Way

'Greatest Show on Earth' Here in June; Two Pictures That Seem Worth Waiting For; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

HOLD YOUR HORSES, mister, the elephants are coming!

Not right away, but in three months almost to the day the Ringling Brothers-Barnum and Bailey Circus, "Greatest Show on Earth," will pitch its annual stand for a three-day stay at Twenty-first and C streets northeast. It will come here from Philadelphia with all its red wagons and pink lemonade for the Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday that appear on the calendar as June 3, 4 and 5. Time to begin saving your pennies, nickels and dimes, kids—all of you kids, from the usual 6 to 106.

BELL

That revolutionary "big top" this year will remain solid blue, with side walls of red, but it will be wider and shorter than last year. That is to say, nearer round, insuring better sight lines from every seat in the place, of which there will be a modest 12,000.

The feature act of the circus this year will be Alfred Court's Swiss Animal Act in which 52 different breeds of beasts participate. I don't know how many of the snarling big "cats" are in this thriller, but the number of Mons. Court's mixed cast would seem to promise everything from a mouse to a mastodon.

This exclusive advance information is imparted to me by Mr. Melvin D. Hildreth, the encyclopedia of all extant circi that walks like a man, who every year tells me everything I don't know about the tanbark and trapezes. What Mel doesn't know about the canvas caravanseries nobody knows, not even excepting the current heirs, inheritors and assigns of all the Barnums, Baileys, Ringlings, Wallaces, Hagenbecks, Sellses, Flotos, Barneses, Sparkses, et al. And my thanks to him.

As my overstrained right hand, Dick Coe, intimated in his variegated piece last Sabbath, there isn't a great deal to squabble about in this year's awards of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Since it was made eligible by no more than an eyelash in this year's competitions, it was a foregone conclusion that David O. Selznick's production of "Gone With the Wind" would practically sweep the slate clean of first prizes. It missed the complete triumph scored by Frank Capra's "It Happened One Night," some years ago, by the unfortunate circumstance that, fine as it was, Clark Gable's portrayal of Rhett Butler in the Margaret Mitchell marathon ran up against an even better impersonation by Robert Donat in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips." Of the others, I still feel that if Walter Wanger's production of "Stagecoach" was good enough to win Thomas Mitchell his "Oscar" for the best supporting performance of the year, it also was good enough to make the Film Daily's "Ten Best Pictures of the Year." I had it on my list, but it ran No. 11 in the national vote. So what?

Those who have read the books will be especially interested in the screen treatments of Howard Spring's best-seller, "My Son, My Son," and Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings' ditto, "The Yearling." Neither has been released as yet. Edward Small, producer of "My Son, My Son," because he had earlier solicited suggestions as to story treatment, writes to say that he is mailing me a copy of Lenore Coffee's script. I am eagerly awaiting it. With Spencer Tracy set for the role of Penny Baxter in "The Yearling," M-G-M is on the hunt for a youngster to play the title role of Jody Baxter. This suggests that Wesley "Freckles" Barry was born 30 years too soon. He would have been the perfect selection. And the late Ernest Torrence, on the strength of his first screen performance with Richard Barthelmess in Joseph Hergesheimer's "Tol'able David," would have been the ideal Buck or Lem Forrester. A little late for that now. And Jane Darwell still would be the completely satisfying mother, Ory Baxter. But who asked me?

If you would still be interested in which pictures were the "Box-office Champions of January," on the strength of the Motion Picture Herald's check of actual box-office statements in key cities throughout the country, they were "Gone With the Wind," "Destry Rides Again," "The Fighting 69th," "Gulliver's Travels," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Swanee River." How two of them ever got up there I'll never know, and you probably never will, either. Which two? Well, why get personal?

When we staggered into the Capitol to catch Jack Durant's act, it seemed to us that Jack was laboring under as fine an attack of bronchial congestion as we ever had seen—and we have seen some pips lately. It didn't show in his work, but it did in his voice and his breathing. We know just how he felt. Maybe "the show must go on" but there come times when it moves into a hospital—or should.

In Hollywood

Hollywood, March 4.

Wait until you see Joan Crawford in "Susan and God," I've never seen her look better. Day I watched her she was wearing a black traveling suit with circular skirt, long cape lined with green and black plaid, black hat with a feather going straight up like an exclamation point, green suede Sam Brown belt, on the shoulder a green dispatch box for cigarettes and change, a topaz set in middle of it with gold mercury wings on either side. Earrings to match, topaz ring, a gold necklace with topaz, a gold bracelet shaped like a hand with topaz. Joan looked quite a dish. And I'll be darned if she wasn't eating homemade fudge. In the scene was John Carroll, Bruce Cabot in the best fitting hunting clothes seen outside of Virginia, Rose Hobart Ruth Hussey and Rita Hayworth—all brunettes, no gold in a carload. "What, no blondes?" "Why, we never thought of that before."

HOPPER

But I know some stars who would have had the rest of the ladies blondes, just for contrast, as they did at a fashionable wedding here. The bride even wanted one of her bridesmaids to dye for the occasion, 'cause she was dark when she was selected as a bridesmaid. But we don't mention those things any more—that's just peroxide over the dam.

A letter addressed to "Mr. Setchel B. De Miles, Hollywood"—and Cecil got it!

Ida Lupino, who was swell in "The Light That Failed" got a week's salary to speak six words In the picture "Destiny" they needed a voice to carry terror and despair. You'll hear her—but never see her, and she's just graduated from simpering ingenues.

Loretta Young's voice has been called the most musical speaking voice on the screen. So says the American Institute of Voice Teaching in New York, which body presented her with a silver plaque.

Columbia says finding Tillie for "Tillie the Toiler" series will be a cinch. But the search is really on for Mac, the short man with the huge nose. Director Robert Sparks says Jimmy Durante or W. C. Fields could fill the bill—that is, if they had sons!

A drunk wandered in to Westmore's Beauty Salon the other day and said: "Is this a beauty salon?" "Yes." "Well, bring me a beauty—I'm lonesome."

Meet the Bespangled Bombshell!

CARMEN MIRANDA, the South American songstress, featured in the Shubert-Olsen & Johnson production of "The Streets of Paris," Broadway hit revue, which opened its first Washington engagement on the stage of the National Theater last night. The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

DAVID FINESTONE, general manager of the Shubert enterprises, was buried Friday . . . It is the custom of the theater, when a house manager dies, to put up the lights of the playhouse which was his charge. And so a token of adherence to this custom was made when the funeral cortege detoured from Eighth Avenue, down Forty-fourth Street, past the Shubert Theater. There, in the bright afternoon sun, the marquee and the signs on the facade of the theater shone dimly but completely to honor the departed host.

BILLY LIVINGSTON, the glamour boy who soon will come into his inheritance, broadcasts now for the "Society Girl" program. He spent the first ten days rushing the studio officials into getting him his social security card . . . On February 10, 1939, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, from Hollywood, wired a young lady here: "Having acute script-trouble," Sir Cedric returned to Hollywood a few weeks ago—and on February 10, 1940, wired the same girl: "Having acute script-trouble."

PHIL BAKER went to Benno Schneider, the noted drama instructor, and announced that he was anxious to enroll for Schneider's courses . . . "I want to do something real in the legitimate theater," was Baker's determined declaration. "I want something exciting. I'm tired of what I'm doing—this phoney art, this stinking radio, which pays a lot of money." Then Baker hunted frantically through the room, found a piece of wood, knocked on it and continued ". . . a lot of money."

KIMBALL FLACCUS, whose second volume of verse has been published agreed to broadcast for N. Y. U.'s English department, via WNYC. Five minutes after the program began the poet phoned the station—to confess that he had forgotten all about it . . . Michael Todd will present a New Orleans exhibit at the World's Fair, offering a double-feature show of flesh entertainment for 25 cents. Todd, who also will present the "Campus" ballroom for college youngsters, never went to school and never has seen New Orleans . . . The members of the cast of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" are rehearsing Keith Winter's "We at the Crossroads" and will give two benefit performances of that play.

IRVING REIS of the Columbia Workshop attracted a great deal of attention because of the shows he presented with Orson Welles and other radio actors. He then went to Hollywood and wrote B-pictures, like "King of Alcatraz," which made much money. On New Year's Eve he was notified that he would be given an opportunity to direct movies. He went to a party and there celebrated his promotion. At 5 a. m. he walked into the library and found a pretty girl playing pick-up-sticks. He joined her in the game and then began: "Are you an actress?" She nodded, and Reis continued: "Well, I'm going to be a director and I might use a girl like you. Any experience?" . . . "One picture, I've just finished making it," she informed . . . "Only one?" he frowned. "Well, you can't tell. We young fellas, with our new ideas, might overcome inexperience. What's your name?" She told him: "Vivien Leigh."

VINTON FREEDLEY, who had to discontinue his plan to star Burgess Meredith in "Young Man With a Horn" and instead will feature him in "Liliom," presented him with a copy of the play, inscribed: "To Young Liliom With a Horn" . . . Bert Wheeler has sold his "Lone Palm" Hotel in Palm Springs to King Charney, the film man . . . Lee Shubert's contributions to the Finnish Relief Fund—in offering his theaters and paying the expenses—amount to more than $16,000.

There Is Riotous Ribaldry On Those 'Streets of Paris'

Bobby Clark, Luella Gear, Carmen Miranda And Sid Marion and Cliff Hall Score at National in Naughty, but Nifty, Revue

By Nelson B. Bell.

One would think, after its season's run on Broadway, that Bobby Clark, Luella Gear, Carmen Miranda, "Think-a-Drink Hoffman, Jo and Jean Readinger, Margo, Kate and Evelyn Hylton, Della Lind, Milton Watson and all the other principals and subordinates in the garish and giddy gaucherie would have trod "The Streets of Paris" until they were footsore and jaded. There was no evidence of it in the National Theater last night.

We have been eyewitness to many an incessant barrage of laughter and applause in the playhouse, man and boy, but seldom a more explosive one than last evening's. The customers fairly shook the house down. In payment, the cast, specialists and huge ensemble shook the customers down—but fairly.

"The Streets of Paris" is strictly on the revue side. There is no "book," no sense and no seriousness discernible at any time during the swift running off of the two acts and umpty-teen scenes. There is, however, plenty of speed, a sizable grist of whistleable tunes—most of them already known to the dialer-inners — and some dancing that unwinds itself "with the speed of the wind," as Jim Barton would say. Most of it is bent a little in the direction of the reesgay, if you know what I mean. The comedy skits never pull their punches and some of them will knock you cold—or hot, as the case may be.

There were those who attended last evening's inaugural performance in fear and trembling lest the absence of Abbott and Costello, due to the illness of Mr. Costello, might slow the proceedings to a slow walk. Their anxiety and ague were a total loss. That old war horse of the less delicate manifestations of comedy, Sid Marion, and his partner, Cliff "Sharlie" Hall, pinch-hitting for the absent comics of the billing, turned in performances that left the pewholders limp. They did no limping themselves. They banged out their comedy routines with an infallible surety that did full justice to a short-notice conscription.

And this would not be overlooking the yeoman's service of Bobby Clark and Luella Gear in the top spots. Mr. Clark and his grease-paint specs have been decorating local stages since a time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, but never more efficaciously than last night. Miss Gear, last seen on the same stage in a dismal drollery called "To Be Continued", gives rise to the hope that she will be for many seasons to come. And up there with them in most of the important intervals of the raucous clowning, Margaret Irving writes her name among the most nimble of the comediennes.

Carmen Miranda, the flamboyantly heralded Brazilian songstress, is merely a featured bit of exotic novelty, "spotted" toward the end of the first act and present in the final-curtain roundup. She has a way with her. Four or five years in the tropics introduced us to many a good deal like her—but not quite. Her "Souse American Way" is the most comprehensible of her quartet of songs to American audiences, who cannot make head or tail of the lyrics to the rest of her numbers.

The major singing chores are executed with skill enough by Milton Watson, a serviceable revue tenor, and Della Lind, a blonde soprano, whose voice sometimes is a little too blonde to do the most good, plus those three Hylton Sisters. The dancing highlights fall for the most part to Jo and Jeanne Readinger.

One of the outstanding specialties is "Think-a-Drink" Hoffman, the wizard bartender, who pours anything you want out of an empty cocktail shaker. Ours was a cherry brandy which seemed to be the real thing. I'll have to ask the fellow who got a cup of coffee about his. Another is that perennial Shubert wheelhorse, Ben Dova, who dives out of a stage box to take up an acrobatic routine that winds up on a dizzy lamppost with almost unbelievable results.

As I have intimated—I hope—there is raucous, ribald and rowdy fun at the National this week. I wasn't in any too receptive a mood last night, but they finally had to scrape me up out of the aisle. That's the kind of party it is.

Roosevelt Sees Fiscal Chiefs; Refund Is Set

Treasury to Borrow Nothing in March, Morgenthau Says

President Roosevelt held a long conference yesterday with fiscal advisers amid reports that a drive for a new spending program, coupled with plans for avoiding a hike in the public debt, was being made within the Administration.

The conference, surrounded with secrecy, was attended by Secretary Morgenthau, Undersecretary Bell, Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board and Lauchlin Currie, administrative assistant to the President.

Meanwhile, Morgenthau announced that the Treasury would borrow no new money on March 15, but would refund on that date $738,428,400 of 1½ per cent notes maturing June 15 by offering the holders another five-year note in exchange.

New Note Is Surprise

Refunding of the June note maturity had been anticipated, but it occasioned surprise that another note should be offered to the holders. Since $352,993,450 of 3⅜ per cent bonds have been called for redemption on June 15, there had been some speculation that a joint refunding operation involving bonds would be devised.

It will be the first time in some years, however, that a note maturity of this size has been refunded entirely into new notes. The question was raised, as a result, whether the Administration had decided against offering the note holders a longer-term security because of the possibility of a German drive against the Western Front or because of new spending plans at home.

Type of Bond Not Decided

Morgenthau said he had made no plans on the type of scarcity to be offered holders of the maturing bonds. In any event, he said, the bond refunding will not take place until after March 15.

Of yesterday's White House conferees, Eccles and Currie belong to the school of spending advocates. Eccles in recent months has opposed cuts in farm benefits and work relief payments. The argument has been advanced recently that new pump-priming, or at least abandonment of projected economies, is necessary if a new business slump is to be avoided.

Spending, however, runs counter to the effort to avoid a hike in the $45,000,000,000 national debt limit. As a result, proposals have been advanced that gold in the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, silver seigniorage and cash in the Treasury working balance be used instead of resorting to new borrowing.

Wire Topping of Balance

Two Democratic Senators—Wheeler, of Montana, and Adams, of Colorado—proposed yesterday that the Treasury draw down its huge cash balance, which the President's budget estimates would keep at about the $1,100,000,000 level. The object would be to avoid higher taxes or an increase in the debt limit.

Wheeler said he felt that money in the cash balance could be used to make parity payments to farmers. He also favored tapping the stabilization fund. Adams expressed the belief that the fund was no longer necessary for its original purpose.

Treasury sources indicated a distinct lack of enthusiasm for the proposals.

Half of Fashion Show Throng May Be Men, Experts Predict

Bachelors Who Like Eye-Filling Parade Expected at Blood Bank Benefit By Connecticut Avenue Merchants

The Connecticut Avenue Association's fashion parade March 11 at the Mayflower Hotel, proceeds of which will go to the Children's Hospital blood and seru mbank, is expected to help answer some long-standing questions on men's reactions to a woman's style world.

Some of the questions are: Do Washington men like fashion shows? Do they go because they enjoy pretty girl parades or because they seek authoritative dress pointers for their wives? Do they even go at all?

The experts and the curious who have huddled over the questions admit they know the answers, but like to pose the questions anyway.

Male attendance at local style showings has shown large increases since 1934. In 1934, when the Connecticut Avenue Association presented its first formal showing, only 10 per cent of the audience was men. The number increased to 30 per cent at later promenades.

Next Monday's audiences at three showings are expected to include 40 to 50 per cent men.

Apparently the male who is shy of crowds of women or frightened of taking a kidding around the office if he attends fashion shows needs view only one promenade to break down his resistance.

The married man attends because it gives him the opportunity to advise his wife on her dress from the point of view of an "expert." The family man confides that he may have been disliking his wife in checks, or deploring her in plaids, and the opportunity to speak out in praise of the right clothes is a reward for past silences.

The bachelor, on the other hand, is glad to spend a diverting and eye-filling evening at a fashion show. One observant bachelor has done some private detecting of his own about men at fashion shows and says men especially dislike "spinach" in dress. Men are more conscious than women realize of a crooked skirt, wavering stocking seams, hats that are "too funny" or clothes too tight, he reports.

There will be shows Monday, at 2, 5 and 8 p. m., and a day-long exhibit of clothes, jewelry and home furnishings.

Curley to Give 4 Charities Here $2,000

Archbishop Reveals Presentation to Be Made On His Installation

Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of the Diocese of Baltimore and Washington, last night promised to give $2,000 to the Catholic Charities of Washington on the occasion of his installation on Easter Monday, March 25.

He announced this purpose at the annual meeting of the Catholic Charities in the Willard Hotel. He said he would give $500 each to the St. Vincent de Paul Society, the Ladies of Charity, the milk fund of the Ladies of Charity, and the Christ Child Society.

Instead of the formal banquet usually associated with archepiscopal installations, he said, a dinner would be given to the old people helped by the Little Sisters of the Poor.

To Draw on Jubilee Fund

The money for the gifts would be drawn from the jubilee fund raised in Washington in his honor last year, he said.

Archbishop Curley commended the priests and laymen of Washington for their charitable works.

Msgr. Lawrence J. Shehan, director of Catholic Charities, reported that 1,301 families had been cared for, an increase of 90 over the previous year. He said 441 children were also cared for, of whom 90 were placed in foster homes. This represents an increase of 16 so placed over the previous year.

Charity Reports Read

The treasurer's report, read by Caesar Aiello, showed expenditures of $65,721.61 in the family and children's departments, of which $56,196.72 came from the Community Chest.

George Cleary, president of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, reported expenditures of $47,315.42 in caring for 1,263 families. A decrease in expenditures over the previous year was accompanied by an increase in spiritual works of the society, he said.

Mrs. Frank Schwoerer, president of the Ladies of Charity, reported expenditures of $7,012, including $1,085.49 for shoes and $1,159.61 for milk in addition to the milk fund. The ladies cared for 342 families during the year, she said.

Mrs. George H. O'Connor reported for the milk fund, which spends $4,000 annually and last year provided 91,250 quarts of milk for undernourished children.

Camps Cared for Many

Miss Stellita Stapleton reported for the Christ Child Society the care of 141 patients at the Christ Child convalescent farm at Rockville, Md., an equal number of girls at the Fresh Air Camp, and the treatment of 871 children in the course of 2,076 clinical visits. The society also made 382 layettes during the year, she said.

Herman Schulties reported for the Merrick Boys Camp, which received 328 boys for two-week periods last year, as compared with 286 in 1938, its first full year of operation. Miss Mary Mattingley, who was to have reported for the social service committee of the Sodality Union, was unable to be present.

Dr. Crosson Reelected

Dr. Henry Crosson was re-elected president. The other officers elected are George H. O'Connor, first vice president; John Saul, second vice president; James E. Colliflower, third vice president; Allen Pope, secretary, and Adam Weschler, treasurer, and Msgr. Lawrence J. Shehan, director.

The following were elected to the board of directors: Dr. Ernest Aschenbach, Frederick E. Altemus, Henry J. Auth, George L. Borger, Francis X. Callahan, Michale F. Calnan, Rev. J. K. Cartwright, D. D., Judge Walter J. Casey, Eugene A. Clark, George J. Cleary, William J. Cozier, Leo A. Codd, Right Rev. E. J. Connelly, J. Hadley Doyle, Dr. George R. Ellis, James B. Flynn, Ferdinand Fraser, Francis J. Kane, Dr. M. D'Arcy Magee, Joseph J. Malloy, Charles P. Maloney, Arthur J. May, Victor S. Mersch, William J. Neale, Daniel W. O'Donoghue, Jr., Myles H. Delano Urges CreditPlanning For Emergency

Comptroller's Report Leaves Law Changes To Senate Committee

Preston Delano, Comptroller of the currency, said in his annual report yesterday future development of the banking system should be planned so credit facilities, "so essential to our continued economic and social progress, shall be available even in times of stress and great emergency."

Because of an investigation the Senate Banking and Currency Committee has undertaken into the banking law and the need of changes, no recommendations for legislation are included in the report.

Delano said "existing systems of banking and federal bank supervision are not perfect," pointing out many adjustments must be made to meet changing conditions. In determining the nature of the adjustments, he warned, "every available resource must be thoroughly explored and to that end it is essential that there be very close cooperation between bankers and the Government and between the several agencies of the Government which are interested in the subject."

Since inception of the national banking system, February 25, 1893, to and including October 31, 1939, 14,421 national banking associations have been authorized. Of these banks, 6,007 have gone into voluntary liquidation, quit business or merged with other national or State banks and 408 consolidated with other banks under the act of November 7, 1918.

At the beginning of operation of the Federal Reserve System, November 2, 1914, there were 7,578 national banks, with aggregate common capital stock of $1,072,492,000, as compared with total common capital stock of $1,323,295,000 for the 5,205 national banks in existence October 31, 1939.

In addition, 1,618 of the national banks in existence October 31, 1939, had an aggregate of $239,292,000 of preferred capital stock outstanding. Since November 2, 1914, there has been a decrease of 2,373 in the number of national banks in existence, but a net increase of $250,803,000 in the amount of common capital stock and, in addition, a net increase of $239,292,000 in capital through issuance of preferred stock in the last 6½ years.

In this 25-year period, 3,759 new national banks have been chartered, with total common capital stock of $563,736,000 and preferred stock of $55,304,000.

Annulment Suits Add They Never Lived With Husbands

Two young women who said they found themselves at the altar when they only intended to lift a few at the bar asked the District Court yesterday to annul their marriages.

Mrs. Dolores Aurelia Cash Owen, 23, 3000 Thirty-ninth street northwest, said in her complaint that when she married Paul E. Owen, 29, 1614 P street northwest, here January 23, she was "so under the influence of intoxicating liquor that she had no knowledge of the ceremony." Her attorney is Cornelius H. Doherty.

And Mrs. Ethel M. Furr Napoli, 941 New Hampshire avenue northwest, told the court that she was "under the influence of intoxicating liquor and did not understand the consequences of their act" when she married Edward J. Napoli, 604 F street northeast, at Spottsylvania Courthouse, Va., at 6 a. m., February 27. She was represented by Attorney John J. McGinnis.

Both brides said in their complaints that they never lived with their husbands.

Mankind Now Is Confused, Pastor Says

Mankind is in confusion today because it has lost sight of Christian salvation, the Rev. George H. Bennett, pastor of Wilson Memorial Methodist Church, said yesterday at noon Lenten services at the Penn Theater, Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh street southeast. The services, held daily, Monday through Friday, during Lent, are under the auspices of the Southeast Interchurch Council.

Discussing Christ at the cross, the Rev. Mr. Bennett said, "His purposes of life were fresh and clear. We today are in confusion because we've lost sight of the great objective for living.

"All of life must be lived for the distinct purpose of facing problems squarely . . . We must have a sense of direction clearly before us. If we've lived with this objective clear in our minds, the background we have built up will support us when crises come."

In the present international crisis "our minds are so confused that no one sees the way out," the speaker said. He attributed this to the fact that "we haven't been facing facts squarely, but have been choosing the road of least resistance."

The Rev. A. F. T. Raum, pastor of the First Methodist Church, presided.

Adam Here

All 3 Tons of Him Arrive in New York

By the Associated Press

New York, March 4.—Three tons of chest-thumping pink alabaster arrived today.

Surrounded by a heavy atmosphere of war-time secrecy, Jacob Epstein's squat, 7-foot statue of Adam—storm center of mingled rapture and jeers in European art circles last summer—came in "under sealed orders" in the British freighter Malay Prince.

With a special guard and protected by an $85,000 insurance policy, the huge statue was consigned to ship's brokers here, but when the brokers went down the bay to get a look at Adam officials shook their heads.

"Orders for Adam are at the British consulate," the officials said. "Until we know what the orders are, Adam cannot be seen."

Described by Epstein as "my greatest work," Adam was exhibited to more than a million customers in the British Isles and took in $250,000 in paid admissions.

On its coast-to-coast exhibition tour in this country, Adam will help collect funds to buy American airplanes, ultimately winding up at the New York World's Fair.

On Banning Politics

One argument being used against the proposed extension of the Hatch Act, as the Senate debates that measure, is the charge that it would "seriously cripple" the Democratic Party in the coming campaign.

If that assertion is correct, it affords the strongest possible argument in favor of the proposed extension. For, as Senator Minton tacitly admits, the abuses of the patronage system, with its linkup between public office and partisan political activity are still being encouraged by means of Federal subventions to State and local governments.

If the more than 100,000 farmers who belong to local AAA committees are forbidden by Secretary Wallace to participate actively in politics, it would seem only logical to ban political activity by State and local officials paid from the Federal Treasury. However, the order to the AAA committeemen was not due, as wrongly reported, to their inclusion under the Hatch Act.

Except for a limited number of full-time State committeemen employed by the AAA, the local farmer-groups paid on a per diem basis are not regarded as Federal employes within the meaning of the Hatch Act. It is the articles of association under which the local committees operate that prohibit committee members from becoming active managers of political campaigns. In other words, the political ban is the result of a self-imposed rule that has nothing to do with the Hatch Act.

The Wallace order, as well as the proposed extension of the Hatch Act, gives rise to interesting speculation as to the ultimate outcome of efforts to divorce politics from the routine administration of public affairs. There is no doubt about the desirability of preventing the AAA from becoming an instrumentality to further the fortunes of the party in power. It might easily be so used if the farmers who serve on local committees, even for limited pay, were permitted to engage actively in politics.

But, as the scope of governmental activities expands, an increasing proportion of the population is directly affected by the policies pursued by the Government. Loans advanced by the HOLC, the RFC, and other lending agencies, pensions, social security benefits, relief jobs, and employment in regulated industries give the public at large an unavoidable feeling of dependence upon the regime in power.

When recipients of subsidies, loans or pensions engage in active political work they do so in some cases with an eye to retention of their benefits. While they are not holders of public office, they are not disinterested workers in the political field. Yet it is obvious that political activity by these groups should not be banned.

So long as we had a Government of restricted powers, it was comparatively easy to draw a line between the office-holder and the private citizen. Today that difference is less sharply marked. In a totalitarian state in which everybody works for the government it disappears entirely.

Fortunately, we have a long way to go before we reach that goal, but there is no doubt that we are confronted today by new and difficult problems as the progress of bureaucratization draws more and more people into the circle of those whose incomes depend in some measure upon governmental activities.

That Debt Limit

The latest suggestion for avoiding an increase in the statutory debt limit comes from Senator Wheeler. He suggests that the Treasury's working cash balance is larger than necessary and might be safely reduced. The stabilization fund might also be used to some extent, he thinks, to finance current expenditures.

As a matter of fact, there are a good many ways in which funds could be obtained to cover current expenditures and postpone the day when the debt limit will have to be raised. But no amount of ingenuity will serve to conceal the weakness of the present budgetary position.

Ingenious schemes for recapturing a certain amount of cash from Treasury funds, and reducing the capital of Government lending agencies, may help to cover part of the current deficit without resort to borrowing. But they do nothing to ease the burden that will fall upon future taxpayers. Instead, they lead to the exhaustion of resources that may later be needed in an emergency. And they may even cause Congress to vote for expenditures that would otherwise be dropped.

It is significant, for instance, that Senator Wheeler accompanies his recommendation for raiding the Treasury's cash with a suggestion that parity payments for the farmer could then be voted. Apparently many of our legislators are less concerned about excessive spending than about ways and means of preventing the expenditures from being immediately reflected in a rise in public debt.

"Restraint Of Trade"

Thurman Arnold's campaign against monopolistic practices has been notably strengthened by the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District in the case of the American Medical Association. Justice Groner's opinion, from which there was no dissent, thoroughly sustains Mr. Arnold's broad interpretation of the antitrust laws. It is unquestionably a significant triumph for the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

When Judge Proctor of the District Court sustained the Medical Association's demurrer to an indictment for "conspiracy in restraint of trade" The Post highly commended that opinion. It appeared to us that the lower court had drawn an obviously reasonable distinction between the practice of medicine and pursuit of trade or commerce. But the Court of Appeals has probed deeper into the roots of the law. It has presented a convincing and well-sustained opinion as the basis for its reversal of the lower court's conclusions.

Justice Proctor appears to have given considerable weight to the fact that the Supreme Court, in an opinion by Justice Sutherland, had drawn a distinction between trade and professional service in interpreting Section 3 of the Sherman Act. "Whenever any occupation, employment, or business," the Supreme Court has said, "is carried on for the purpose of profit, or gain, or a livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions, it is constantly called a trade."

Justice Sutherland's language certainly indicates that he drew a distinction between trades and professions in his thinking. But in that case the court decided only that the cleaning business falls within the meaning of "trade" as used in the act. The Court of Appeals believes that the distinction casually drawn by Justice Sutherland is not a proper guide in deciding the present issue.

What, then, is the meaning of "restraint of trade" as used in the Sherman Act? According to the Court of Appeals, that phrase had its genesis in the common law. The court cites various cases, in both England and the United States, to show that contracts in "restraint of trade" were entered into by doctors and attorneys. Under rulings by the Supreme Court, it is pointed out, the scope of this phrase as used in the Sherman Act should be "measured by its use at common law."

So the Court of Appeals concludes that "a restraint imposed upon the lawful practice of medicine—and a fortiori—upon the operation of hospitals and of a lawful organization for the financing of medical services to its members, is just as much in restraint of trade as if it were directed against any other occupation or employment or business."

The decision is not necessarily a blow to the American Medical Association or the District Medical Society as such. "We are not unmindful," wrote Justice Groner, "of the importance of rules of conduct in medical practice, rules which can best be made by the profession itself." The opinion is not aimed at disciplinary action by an organized profession against quacks and charlatans. Rather the court has interpreted the law as prohibiting acts "which unduly hinder a person from employing his talents, industry, or capital in any lawful undertaking and thus keep the public from receiving goods and services as freely as it would without such restraints."

Labor organizations that have run afoul of the antitrust laws will thus find almost as much interest in the opinion as medical men. "Organizations and rules which have as their purpose the improvement of conditions in any particular trade or occupation, and the regulation of relations between traders, are," the opinion says ". . . beneficial rather than detrimental to the public interest. But when these same organizations go so far as to impose unreasonable restraints on the operations in their field, they become subject to the prohibitions of the Sherman Act."

It is well to remember that this opinion is not final. An issue of such importance will not be settled until the Supreme Court has spoken. Moreover, the effect of this decision is only to remand the case to the District Court for trial on its merits. If this view of the law is upheld, it will remain to be seen whether the medical associations and individual doctors accused of conspiring against the Group Health Association can be convicted.

In the meantime it is gratifying to know that the G. H. A. now regards its relations with local doctors and hospitals as being "satisfactory." And the Medical Society itself is operating a health security program under which the cost of medical care for low-income and medium-income groups is widely distributed.

Italy And The Allies

The Allies must have been well aware, at the time they announced their decision to halt all seaborne shipments of German coal to Italy, that such action would meet, as it has met, with a strong protest from the Rome government. But this unpleasant prospect has apparently not deterred them from carrying the plan into effect.

There is no doubt that Great Britain and France are anxious to retain Italian good will. Indeed, from the very beginning of the war, they have shown a disposition to favor Italy above all other neutrals. The Allied contraband control, for instance, has been much more leniently applied in the case of Italian ships than the vessels of practically any other non-belligerents. And, while the Allied blockade was presumably extended to all German exports months ago, it was actually not until March 1 that the rule was applied in the case of German coal being sent by sea to Italy.

But the Allies are not prepared to favor Italy indefinitely without a quid pro quo and they are particularly unwilling to favor her to the extent of endangering their own chances of victory. That is why, regardless of Italian repercussions, they have decided to plug up this loophole in the blockade. Incidentally, the coal embargo provides them with an opportunity to bring home to Mussolini Italy's economic vulnerability and thus water down whatever eagerness the Duce may have to join the war on Germany's side.

Of all Europe's great powers Italy happens to be the least capable of keeping her industrial plant running with domestic supplies alone. Without a continuous supply of foreign coal, for instance, Italian factories would have to shut down and Italian homes would go unheated. Germany can, out of her surplus production, supply a large part of Italy's fuel needs. But the disorganized state of her railroads and the cost of transporting German coal overland to Italy would make such exports economically unfeasible in large volume.

Some time ago, the Allies suggested to Italy that she rid herself of her dependence on German coal supplies by purchasing coal mined in Great Britain, or exchanging it for Italian products needed by the Allies. To do so, however, would tend to place Italy within the British and French economic orbit and make her more dependent on the Allies. So Italy balked.

Whatever advantages she has managed to derive from her non-belligerency has been the result of her freedom of action. Besides, the alliance with Germany is still in force, if inoperative, and Italy is not prepared voluntarily to do anything that the Third Reich might regard as an unfriendly act.

No wonder, then, the Italian government has sent a strong note to London objecting, not only to the coal embargo, but also to various other blockade measures put into force by the Allies. Rome warns the British that continuation of such measures may imperil the Anglo-Italian gentleman's agreement of April, 1938. But it appears doubtful whether this protest and warning will cause the British to recede from their position.

As the war enters its seventh month, the determination of both sides to stop at no measures that would increase their chance of victory is certain to increase. Although the most-favored of neutrals, Italy also is finding herself ground between the German and Allied millstones.

Belated Conference

The seeming apathy of the District Commissioners in the face of a continuing crime wave must be particularly discouraging to those who believe that Washington has one of the best governments to be found in American cities. It is true, of course, that the city fathers have no authority to deal with basic causes of lawlessness. But they could certainly make a better showing than they have done to date.

Commissioner Hazen's belated efforts to bring about a conference of city officials, police officers and prosecutors reflects little credit upon himself or the Board of Commissioners. The suggestion that such a conference be called came from Chairman King of the Senate District Committee. Mr. King explains that he intended no criticism of the local authorities. But the very fact that a Senator from a distant State has to remind the Commissioners of their obligation to investigate a local crime wave and take steps to counteract it is criticism enough.

Washington seems helpless when confronted by an outbreak of crime for the same reason that it is impotent in meeting numerous crises. It has no local government which can act promptly and effectively in behalf of the community's best interest. Our city fathers must wait for the ponderous wheels of national legislation to turn before even minor local emergencies can be met. And now it appears that the Commissioners cannot even initiate desirable administrative measures, beyond their routine duties, without prodding from Capitol Hill.

The Orchestra Impasse

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It has been some time since I have seen any reference to the National Symphony Orchestra campaign. In other years as a campaign worker I did what I could to support the symphony, because I sincerely felt that Dr. Kindler had done a good job of organization and that the orchestra had contributed immeasurably to the cultural life of this community.

Now that the 1940 campaign has been shelved, I am wondering if it would not be timely to make a suggestion to which I have given thought for a number of years. It is evident that more than financial difficulties lie behind the scenes of our orchestra. Musicians are not money grabbers. Perhaps there is no professional group so willing to give of themselves if through that giving they can make themselves expressive and articulate.

But when a group is stifled by the limitations of its leader, when they cannot feel unconscious admiration for his musicianship—then they cannot play, their work is taken away from them whether they get paid for it or not; they become dissatisfied and easy prey for labor difficulties and the attendant woes which now beset the local group.

Dr. Kindler made an orchestra where there was none. He has done his job well, but his orchestra has outgrown him. Qualities which made him successful in early organization are not necessarily qualities which bring out musicianship and loyalty in an established orchestra.

There are many fine conductors without permanent positions. Why can't we start over again?

"Crime In The Capital"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I very much approve of your splendid editorial "Crime In the Capital" in The Post of March 3. It is a good article, very pointed, concise, and exact. Let the good work go on.

Insist on a showdown. Expose those responsible for such deplorable, disgusting, and distasteful conditions, such as are occurring almost daily in our midst and various sections of our city, also the adjacent surburbs under the jurisdiction of the D. C. In my opinion it behooves the press of our city to fathom and ferret out where the neglect and fault lies. I would advocate those to blame ought to turn their jobs over to others, who can do a better and quicker job at once.

"Questions We Regard As Vital"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Our embarrassing inability, as citizens, to think things through and make up our minds, shows itself in recent actions of Congress on international affairs. We really should not be surprised. With respect to the Finns, do we think or do we merely "emote?"

It sounds hard, but I do not believe that we have really wanted to help the Finns so much as we have wanted to show our indignation against Russia. Also, as a Nation, we have an ideal of wanting to help the underdog; but really we are often satisfied if we can just make a show of helping. This feeling is as often satisfied in making horrible faces and calling names at the aggressor as it is in giving concrete aid to the oppressed.

If we really knew where we stood, we would not get so excited over the evils being perpetrated 3,000 miles away, but would apply ourselves soberly and with resolution to those lying under our noses. But the truth is that home problems are never so exciting and dramatic as those of our neighbors. I do not accuse anyone. I am that way myself, and believe nearly everybody is. It is a human trait.

For instance, I never in my life knew a Finn. But I know the woman in our town who couldn't send her children to school during the recent severe weather because they had no warm clothing. Now the "best people" got together some things and sent them to her; but we will never apply our minds seriously to a long-term solution of this woman's problem, because she is not interesting. She is dull and shiftless and unattractive. But the Finns, now——! There's fine stock for you! Imagine their sufferings at the hands of those demon Tartars.

That is what I think. But at the same time I suspect myself of unwholesomeness in thinking it. How can I spend so much time and energy hating and condemning Russia, when I ignore the Tartar in my own skin? A Russian is a bad fellow who doesn't believe in God. But is there any worse atheism than that which, as our wisest citizen reminded us, "denies the divinity of man?" Am I denying that in these children down the hill?

And to come closer home, it strikes me as very odd that I should belong to a peace society when I have never been able to make up that quarrel over a legacy which split two branches of my family wide open seven years ago. If I could make my own peace in this instance, would it not be a sufficient contribution to the peace of the world? The war makers are men who have not been able to make peace in their own private lives, but just proceed to translate their private problems into public ones.

If some woman who really believed in God had helped young Hitler to satisfy his ambition to become a great architect, how different things would be today.

We should learn to think through our own close-to-home problems, instead of "wishing to think," as Abbe Dimnet pointed out in a good paragraph of that book of his which had us by the ears in the late 'twenties . . . though we quickly forgot it.

"There are many questions which we regard as vital," he said, "yet about which we are vague. God, immortality, the foundation of morals, the nature and basis of happiness, love, marriage, the use of life, education, literary or artistic principles, what do we know about all these? So little that it is next to nothing. We have heard these issues mentioned so often, we have mentioned them ourselves in so many occurrences, that we gradually acquire an idea that they are familiar. But this is a mere fallacy . . . we call our procrastination the time we have taken to think . . . But . . . we have not been thinking at all, we have only been wishing to think."

What do we think about the Negro problem? Labor? The relationship between the sexes? These three alone, not to mention a dozen others which are definitely close and urgent, would keep us so busy, if we really applied our energies to them, that we would not have more than about 15 minutes a day to give to Europe. And if we could really make up our minds about them, you may be sure action would follow.

"Help Finland"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I am deeply stirred by the "Appeal from Sweden for Finland" which was made public yesterday. Two of the signers are my personal friends whom I know to be men of high distinction and solid worth.

We know that they are right in asserting that: "In one lightning flash the drama of Finland's struggle against barbarism and anarchy has revealed to the world where the most serious threat to western civilization is to be found and how the most profound elements of our whole Christian culture are imperiled."

Finland is standing on her "5-yard line." Her neighbors are frantically shouting "hold them." We are listening anxiously over the radio and cheering Finnish resistence by the goal posts. Our official loan for nonmilitary purposes is a fine gesture but we cannot silence our conscience by gestures.

It is no longer a question of neutrality in an undeclared war by international gangsters. We have declared our sympathy with Finland and are helping indirectly. We might as well "go the distance" and help outright.

There is little use in sending bandages and cigarettes to a nation about to be annihilated. Finland needs arms and men. If we cannot send men we can at least provide arms. This war evidently is going to be won in the air.

Every available aeroplane not needed for our own immediate national defense should be rushed to Finland. We cannot with self respect hold back any aid within our power.

If Russia objects, what of it? We will soon be compelled in all decency to stop the immense flow of war supplies into Russia. We cannot honorably help both Russia and Finland. In this hour of world tragedy let us openly help Finland without hypocrisy and manfully accept all of the consequences!

Public Defender System

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your recent news stories, as well as your editorial of March 1, about the recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in the case where a colored man was convicted of murder, and the conviction set aside on the ground that he was represented by inexperienced counsel, very forcibly brought to the attention of the people of Washington the necessity for the substitution of a sounder and more scientific system of providing representation for indigent persons accused of crime than the present system of appointment by the court of young lawyers to defend such persons.

Both the news stories and the editorial squarely present the problem, and in my opinion constitute a distinct service by The Washington Post to the people of this city. I am afraid that if the matter had not been forcibly brought to the front by your paper, that it would have elicited but slight comment and necessary reforms would still lag.

As a result of the prominence which you gave to the story, and the completeness with which it was written, it seems very likely that Congress will take some action now to install in the District of Columbia what is known as "The Public Defender System," in use in many other cities and working very successfully, not only in the interest of the poor people, but of the community and the Nation as a whole.

The Post Impressionist

The Excesses Of Hope

To begin by saying that I was reading from the letters of Doctor Johnson the other evening is a little misleading. It happens that I was; but putting it that way, as though I hardly let a night go by without digging into the famous letters, gives the wrong impression.

The truth is I can't remember when I last spent an evening with the Doctor and I wouldn't hazard a prediction about the next time I'm likely to fall for his charms. But the other evening I did pick up a volume entitled "The Selected Letters of Samuel Johnson" and I did read it.

Now that it's behind me I don't feel that this solitary flight into the ether of scholarship has given me any right to take up where Boswell left off. Unlike a good many people who make brief excursions to unfamiliar places I feel I have nothing to add to the body of Johnson criticism; but, though it won't add a cubit to his stature, I do want to say something about one of the letters because I think it's a jewel.

The letter I'm talking about is one Johnson wrote when he was 52 years of age. That would have been in 1762 if the text I read from is correct. It may be that at 52 Johnson had passed his prime. I don't know. Even if he had, on that day in 1762—it was the eighth of June—when he sat down to compose this letter, I'm certain the old flame came to life once more and for a few minutes crackled as intensely and as brilliantly as ever before. The same man who some years before had written to Lord Chesterfield was writing now again.

This time the letter was written to a lady. I've already ruled myself out as an exegetical expert, so I won't even attempt to offer a clue to her identity. The text didn't say. Johnson addresses her as "Madam" (just that, not "Dear madam"), and the letter itself drops no hint. Who she was is not important, however. What Johnson said to her is; and this, after that economic salutation, is what he said:

"I hope you will believe that my delay in answering your letter could proceed only from my unwillingness to destroy any hope you had formed. Hope is itself a species of happiness, and perhaps the chief happiness which this world affords; but, like all other pleasures immoderately enjoyed, the excesses of hope must be expiated by pain; and expectations improperly indulged, must end in disappointment. If it be asked, what is the improper expectation which it is dangerous to indulge experience will quickly answer, that it is such expectation as is dictated not by reason, but by desire; expectation raised, not by the common occurrences of life, but by the wants of the expectant; an expectation that requires the common course of things to be changed, and the general rule of action to be broken."

There is, of course, more! but I defy anyone who has read that first paragraph to stop there. What does this woman want? Has she proposed marriage? Does she want Johnson to collaborate with her on a play? Does she want an introduction to David Garrick? Does she want to borrow money? Does she want Johnson to repay a loan? Does she want him to address next Tuesday's meeting of the Lichfield Uplift Association? Or does she want him to intercede with an archbishop on behalf of her son who yearns for University training?

The last guess happens to be right. She does want him to petition an archbishop in her son's behalf. It is a monumental piece of supererogation to point out that this was one petition the archbishop was never called upon to worry over. It is something to be said merely for the record.

With that out of the way I can go on to say that the mere fact of Johnson's having turned the solicitous mother down isn't what interests me. What catches my attention is that here you have a letter that can be turned to a hundred lovely uses. The importunations of needy relatives, penurious, half-remembered schoolmates and fraternity brothers, anonymous madmen who beseech you by mail to send them a tithe of all you possess that the world may be ennobled by the patenting of their newly devised silent ice-cream scoops—the irreverent and irrelevant proposals of a whole army of articulate parasites would be silenced forever by any one of the magic clauses in Doctor Johnson's letter.

The same language might not silence forever the disturbing voice of a collection agency. But it might give the agency pause. Reading a response to its latest dunning letter that it's "expectations is dictated not by reason but by desire" might give the collection agency apoplexy. If it doesn't and the agency reads on it will learn that it's expectation is "raised, not by the common occurrences of life, but by (its) wants (as) the expectant;" that its "expectation requires the common course of things to be changed, and the general rules of action to be broken."

The agency may not, as I have said, be silenced forever, but it should be flabbergasted, and by the time its correspondence clerk has got his second wind the victim may have got his, too, and may very well be in a position to send them a check.

The season suggests another use for the Doctor's triple-threat prose. What better defense could the grimly determined bachelor find against a leap-year proposal? By the time the lady not of his choice had reached the line telling her that "expectations improperly indulged must end in disappointment" he'd have made an enemy for life; but he would, at the same time, have accomplished his purpose.

Among people of discrimination who resent the intrusions of excessively demanding friends and foes the first paragraph of Doctor Johnson's letter should be in constant use. It should be used not in substance merely, but lest any of its pulverizing effect be lost, literally, word for word, syllable for syllable.

Every sane man anathematizes form letters. Still, I think every sane man's aversion will be overcome by the masterliness of the great Doctor's presentation. I look forward to the day when the Doctor's battering lines will be the standard response among men of taste to all written importunities. After all, when we find perfection it is useless to look further.

Again In Shadow

Louvain Today

Special Correspondence of The Post

Louvain, Belgium.

FAR FROM the dull, familiar thunder of German siege guns, the peaceful people of Louvain carry on their simple lives today in the growing shades of another European war.

A sleepy Sunday lull, broken only by the cathedral carillon and the occasional strains of [illegible], lay over the rambling empty streets and the broad squares with their inevitable soldiers on this bright afternoon.

It was just afternoon when the great doors opened and the crowds poured into the streets from worship in massive St. Peter's Cathedral. A few remained inside as the others departed—a gray-bearded old man with a cane, two elderly women in deep black, a young soldier in uniform and a young woman who remained kneeling for long minutes. In the unreal half-light falling from the vast heights of the cathedral a priest was snuffing the candles one by one. Soon the mammoth structure was empty of all but the young woman who remained kneeling amid the sea of chairs. The bells pealed loudly, but she remained in the great church, alone.

Sturdy Flemish and Walloon peasants and businessmen dressed stiffly in their Sunday best led their placid wives and round-faced children down the long streets toward their homes. The crowds drained off into the cross streets and disappeared. At the cafe tables about the great Place Foch a few officers and knots of young soldiers sipped soberly at their beer and stared into the middle distance. The slim, white-helmeted gendarmes stood idly at intersections. An occasional military car whizzed by. Street cars clattered along, running almost empty.

Somewhere there was a vendor roasting his chestnuts and their pungent aroma filled the narrow shopping street. Shopkeepers stood in their doorways, muffled lightly on the shady side of the street, and waited for their Sunday closing hour. The shop windows were bursting with great cheeses, dangling sausage balloons, dried and pickled fish, giant apples, pears, peaches and purple and green clusters of grapes.

THE BLUE-AND-WHITE street signs, written in Flemish—the French names scratched out or painted over—pointed the way only to stragglers. Almost forgotten now in these days of grim suspense is the quarreling of yesterday between the Flemish and Walloon peoples and the Belgian government. Half-voiced demands for autonomy have died on the lips of these peoples, uniting in a greater cause.

Louvain or Leuven, Rue Beriot or Beriotstraat, it does not matter now. German guns once pointed and spoke at the ancient spires and the humble homes of Louvain. Now they point again. Leuven remembers. Witness the sharp-faced, long-nosed Flemish soldat with his arm linked to a stocky, swart little Belgian. They are jesting in French as they stride down the side street to their barracks.

Children play gaily in the shallow zig-zag trenches dug on either side of the Volksplaat. It is a game of hide-and-seek behind the pitiful parapets. In Madrid there were the subways and tomblike refugios. Here the men, still hoping against hope, dug shallow ditches in the yellow clay.

Much louder here is the honking of the swans, the quack-quack of ducks, even the cooing of the pigeons in the dovecote and the splashing of the fountain. Two elderly women in rich black lace shawls talk quietly together in the sunlight. The old man who sits beside them rests his hands on his cane and his chin on his hands and his fine eyes watch the water splashing in the pool. The laughter of children echoes distantly over the gentle hillside through the towering trees. A powder-blue pigeon struts pompously along the gravel path, his feather-bespatted feet padding importantly toward us.

"M'sieur le Foreign Minister," offers my wife.

The pigeon cocks his head curiously, ruffles his feathers and retires.

A SUDDEN breeze awakens the leaves on the tree atop the ancient fortress of Louvain. This crumbling ruin, dominating the park, was a bastion of defense 500 years ago in another war that left its wounds in the flesh and soul of the Belgians.

In the fading light below, majestic St. Peter's assumes a somber gravity. Through the painful reconstructed masonry there stares the knitted scar of an exploding shell. There, behind that patch of shrubbery, a burst of shellfire a quarter of a century ago still leaves its hallmark. Louvain burning to the rhythm of an invaders' heavy-booted tread. Louvain burning now in the slanting shafts of late afternoon sunlight, peacefully, the smoke rising only from the squat little chimneys atop red slate roofs. Inside, warmth and the good afternoon coffee and stately hymns on the radio.

There is an unreal bustle about the railroad station and the great place with its stained war memorial. An armed company stands at attention, heavy coats pinned back from the knees, rifles alongside stiff bodies, eyes forward, chins up, helmets glinting dully in the last minute of sunlight.

"ATTENTION! ALLONS!" As twilight falls, the company files into the station to board a train bound for somewhere on the front. In the deepening darkness other soldiers sit a trifle closer now to the women at their sides in the cafes about the place. There is the single shrill, barking scream from the locomotive in the station and the troop-train pulls out.

The carillon is ringing again, insistently, as the porter beckons. "A Bruxelles, M'sieur?"

Books And Things

A Terrifying Book

BIGGER THOMAS was a "black ape," a "bad Nigger," a killer. He was a coward, a thief, a bully, a murderer. His crimes were acts of instinctive passion rather than planned villainies, but he regretted none of them; in them he found his only realization of life. And Richard Wright, who tells Bigger's story in "Native Son" (Harper, $2.50), neither sentimentalizes nor excuses Bigger, though he explains him.

The result is something new in American fiction, and something terrifying; it is not strange that the publishers, a little alarmed at what they had caught in their net, should have invited Dorothy Canfield to write an introduction preparing the reader for the impact of the novel, or that in her foreword she should say that "this novel plumbs blacker depths of human experience than American literature has yet had, comparable only to Dostoievski's revelation of human misery in wrongdoing." What is surprising is that the Book-of-the-Month Club dares to send this powerful book to its hundred thousand members. It may have been influenced toward that courage by memory of its hesitation when, a year ago, it had a chance at John Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath;" the public, time proved, had a stronger literary digestion than the club's judges had foreseen.

THIS IS, I SUPPOSE, the story of the boy Richard Wright just missed becoming. Like Bigger Thomas, he was born in Mississippi and never got far in school. His mother was stricken with paralysis during the World War, and Wright was sent to an uncle in Greenwood, Miss. There he so distinguished himself by fighting, lying, stealing and cutting school that he was sent back to a grandfather who predicted that the boy would end on the gallows. Another uncle tried to influence Richard by forcing him into a Seventh Day Adventist school. That, too, failed. Richard Wright, at 15, packed his cardboard suitcase and started North.

Bigger's story begins with a rat fighting for his life in the filthy Chicago tenement where Bigger, his mother, his brother and his sister camp. Bigger fights, all through his life, much like that trapped rat. He lived in a hostile world. He was afraid of it; he suspected deception in any hint of friendship; he was ready to knife his own pal. He had no sense of belonging anywhere. He had done a little robbing when the story opened, and in his heart he had done a little killing. If he had not done more, it was only because he had been too afraid. And the only way he knew to assert his manhood was by conquering that fear.

Dorothy Canfield says that there is no finer effect in Dostoievski than the last page of "Native Son." Henry Seidel Canby says that "Native Son" is "certainly the finest novel as yet written by an American Negro." It is more than that. It is a super-shocker; it is also a deeply compassionate and understanding novel. As nearly as anything can be, it is the "Grapes of Wrath" of 1940.

The Japan Of Today

By Frank H. Hedges

Special Correspondence of The Post

II—The "New Order In East Asia"

Tokyo.

THE FOREIGN POLICY, as to a very large extent the domestic policy of the Yonai government also, pivots on the China policy of Japan under wartime conditions and on the vitally important question of how to conclude a peace with a China which will afford Japan its main objectives on the continent. Policy toward the United States, Great Britain, Soviet Russia all swing about this single pivot.

Those objectives are supposed to have been stated in the now famous Konoye statement of late December, 1938, which in turn is generally believed to have sprung from an imperial conference held the previous month. Succinctly put, the Konoye declaration advocates friendship, economic cooperation and joint defense against communism on the part of Japan and a China acceptable to Japan. To this declaration, vague and nebulous, must be added other pronouncements by the Japanese government, mostly by Prince Konoye, who served as Premier during the first 18 months of the present warfare.

The most important of these, uttered from time to time, are:

Japan must bring China to her knees.

Japan desires no territory and no indemnity.

Japan will never deal with Chiang Kai-shek.

The Chiang Kai-shek regime must be crushed.

Except the statement that Japan desires no territory and no indemnity, these seem scarcely to accord with the idealistic Konoye statement, nor does the action pursued by the Japanese forces operating in China. It is little wonder then that Takao Saito, veteran M. P., 71-year-old graduate of Yale University and long the most outspoken critic of the Japanese army, sought from the floors of the Diet an explanation of why this was a "Holy War" (Sei Sen), as it is called in Japan, wished to know why Japan should continue to fight at all if there were to be no reward for victory, and frankly declared his disagreement with the Konoye declaration.

Mr. Saito roused a veritable storm throughout the empire. The army was furious and the Rightist parties demanded his expulsion from the Diet. But the nation did not join in this condemnation for, after all, had not Mr. Saito voiced exactly the questions which were in the minds of the vast majority of Japanese?

THE CLEAREST statement of Japan's war aims the writer has encountered, albeit a statement which Japan will indignantly repudiate as false, is to be found in Hallet Abend's recent book, "Chaos in Asia." On page 140 Mr. Abend writes: "Aside from the politico-military aim of securing such a position of security on the mainland that she need no longer fear an attack from Russia, Japan's main objective in her present undeclared war upon China is to secure a monopoly of China's trade and a control of China's vast and only partially developed reserves of raw materials."

This is a very concrete statement and a very concrete goal toward which Japan seems to be working. Idealistic phrases may be issued by men in office in Tokyo, but what the men now in the field in China, whether they be military or economic warriors, are actually doing can lead the neutral observer to no other conclusion than that Mr. Abend is perilously close to the truth.

It is on this basis that the government of Premier Admiral Hitsumasa Yonai, or that of whoever may succeed him in high office, must proceed.

The actual armed warfare in China reached a virtual stalemate with the Japanese capture of Hankow well over a year ago. Since then there have been advances on all fronts and "mopping up" campaigns have been conducted time without number in all parts of the so-called Occupied Territory, which is not really "occupied" except for the cities, railways, ports and navigable rivers. There has been no major military engagement and hence no major military victory, nor does there promise to be any in the future.

ENTRENCHED in the wealth-producing interior provinces, with strong natural barriers between him and the coastal-river parts of China, it would seem that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek could and would hold out indefinitely. He can not be starved out; he needs comparatively little in the way of munitions and other sinews of war and this little he seems to be getting; his financial position is at least as sound as that of the Tokyo government. The stalemate in China is destined to endure indefinitely unless one side or the other has the will and the ability to break it, but it will not be broken by military means.

Both Tokyo and Chungking would like to break it, but each wants to break it entirely in its own favor, and this is an impossibility. It would be necessary to journey to Chungking and talk to the government leaders there to know what sort of a compromise bargain they might be willing to make. How much, if at all, Tokyo would be willing to concede can not be determined even here in Japan's capital, but certain lines of possible policy are clearly in evidence and are even at times given voice.

Those in control of Japan's destiny at present would establish their new order in East Asia on a basis somewhat like this: North China nominally under a new China government but actually under absolute Japanese military, political and economic control; a new central government at Nanking or elsewhere south of the Yellow River which would be accorded recognition by all powers, would be called "independent," but would "cooperate" with Japan in whatever plans Japan might make for it. Inner Mongolia would remain "independent" under Japan.

In pursuance of this objective, first the late Marshal Wu Pei-fu and then Wang Ching-wei was chosen to head the new central government in China. Marshal Wu resolutely refused to do the bidding of the Japanese army, went to the dentist and three days later was dead. Wang Ching-wei has played a clever but extremely dangerous game. After his defection from the generalissimo, he announced the acceptance of the Konoye Declaration as a basis for Sino-Japanese peace, and Japan thought it had at last found the man it needed. Wang has, however, twisted his interpretation of the Konoye Declaration in a way that is more than unpalatable to Tokyo. He has developed a rather broad streak of what the Japanese term "insincerity." Moreover, he has lost the respect of all decent Chinese.

Unless Japan deals with Chiang, or men chosen from his government to represent him, there will never be peace between the two nations, for it takes two to make a peace just as much as to make a war, a fact which many stubborn Japanese deny, contending that Japan can make peace by itself.

THE FRICTION and worse that has arisen between America and Japan find their roots in China. The treatment accorded American treaty rights, American business firms and American individuals there by the Japanese have been such that American friendliness and economic cooperation with Japan are impossible until this treatment is drastically altered.

Fully as important a factor in American-Japanese relations is the conviction of the American public that China must be left independent in reality by Japan. No puppet government supported by Japanese bayonets will be tolerated. Japanese dominance north of the Yellow River might be overlooked by Washington as inevitable, but Japanese unofficial but effective suzerainty in Central, South or West China will never be condoned. Because self-hypnotized by their faith in their "sacred mission" to save China from herself, the Japanese people are bewildered by this American "lack of understanding," not realizing that it is they themselves who neither know nor understand what has taken and is still taking place in China, thanks to a Tokyo government which is careful that the public is not exposed to the cruel winds of truth.

Businessmen, most intelligent Japanese and a fair section of the general mass know that without American friendship, financial and economic cooperation, Japan's plans for a new order in East Asia, even for the continued progress of Japan itself and of Manchukuo, are impossible. Nevertheless, national pride and sentiment are aroused to a point where America's termination of the commercial treaty is held to be an insult, where M. P.'s advocate the termination of the Nine-Power Pact, where politicians and others say that Japan must cease toadying to the United States. Ardently as the Yonai government (attacked by the Rightists as being pro-American) may desire a new treaty and greatly improved relations with America, these are impossible until the Sino-Japanese situation has been adjusted in a way not incompatible with American ideas and policy. Japan is not yet ready to take such a step, but it is not improbable that it will be ere long. A powerful leaven, perhaps undetectable in Washington, is at work in Japan and among the Japanese people today.

As March Comes In

By Kirke L. Simpson

Associated Press Staff Writer

Month Of Decisions

THE MAD month of March has come in like a lion on critical fronts of both Europe's wars, and with little prospect that it will go out like a lamb.

Within the 31-day span of March, history will be made both in Finland and in France. It may set that month apart in the annals of mankind as a more terrible month for Europe and the world than any in recorded history.

A few days, perhaps, will indicate Finland's fate. Her hard-pressed army is in a desperate, last-ditch battle to hold the Karelian Isthmus west front against terrible odds. On the outcome hinges Finland's hope of survival as a free nation

BEFORE March ends, too, the Franco-British Allies and the world should know whether Nazi German thrusts and troop movements foreshadow an attack in an attempt to end the war by a quick, smashing victory, or are merely a new phase of the Nazi "war of nerves." No-man's land between the German Westwall and the French Maginot Line is seething with small scouting raids and air patrols as each side probes desperately to read the spring intentions of the other. The answer is not likely to be long delayed.

The grave plight of Finn defenders of the vital Karelian Isthmus gateway to central and southern Finland cannot be concealed. After more than a month of terrific, head-on battering that ignored huge losses, the Russians have cut for themselves a bloody pathway almost across the isthmus.

Yet the attack that started February 1 on a 70-mile front against the Finnish Mannerheim Line has been whittled down to a spearhead not more than a mile or two wide at a point north of the war-wrecked isthmus port of Viipuri.

AT NO POINT has the Red army managed to crack the Finnish water defenses, despite the heavy ice of a hard winter that still bridges them and makes tank and sled attack possible. From Taipale, on the Lake Ladoga eastern flank, northeasterly in a diagonal line to the head of the inlet from the Gulf of Finland on which Viipuri stands, that water-defense system is still intact with the Finns bracing on it.

The Finns' defense line has swung back like a gate on its eastern hinge, Taipale; it has not yet been broken. And the Finnish last-ditch stand is being made on the strongest natural defensive positions that the isthmus affords.

Another factor may encourage Finn leaders. Even with the fall of Viipuri, a Russian advance into central Finland via this route would be hazardous as long as the Finns hold Taipale, eastern bastion of the Mannerheim Line and the water system that flanks Red communication lines all the way.

Helsinki can reasonably expect a shift of the main Red attack eastward, if Viipuri falls and pray for an early thaw to save Finland as the hardest winter in a quarter century saved it in November and December.

Third-Term Issue

By Mark Sullivan

Trouble For The Democrats

THE THIRD TERM is an issue. As it pertains directly to President Roosevelt, everybody recognizes it as an issue. About that phase of it, there is abundant talk.

But there is another phase of it. The third term is an issue in a broader sense—an impersonal sense. It is an issue the same as the tariff is an issue, or farm relief, or the spending policy, or what not. The principle of a third term is an issue. It is an issue as an abstraction, regardless of its concrete relation to Mr. Roosevelt. The question, "Is a third term right, now or at any time?" is inescapably before the country.

As an issue in this broad sense, men in public life are under pressure to take a stand on it. Many of them are obliged to take a stand. For Republicans, this is no great embarrassment. But Democrats—gosh, how they dread it.

Some of them—the Democratic Senators who are secure in their seats for two or four years more—can face it, even though reluctantly. But consider a Democrat who is up for renomination and reelection this year. That means roughly a third of the Democratic Senators. It means every one of the Democrats in the House (except the very few, if any, who retire voluntarily). It means other Democratic leaders, not now in office but seeking it—Democratic candidates for every office, Senate, House, Governor, hundreds of minor posts.

CONSIDER one of these. The issue is put up to him: "The third term—are you for it or against it?" The unhappy candidate, sighing desperately, picks one of the alternatives. With a manner of "Heaven help me," he announces, let us say, he is for it.

Now look forward to the Democratic National Convention in July. Suppose Mr. Roosevelt, at that time, says he doesn't want a third term, that he won't have it. The mere fact of Mr. Roosevelt renouncing a third term would strengthen the tradition against it, would put a kind of smirch on the very idea of a third term. This would happen if Mr. Roosevelt said no more than: "I do not want a third term."

But Mr. Roosevelt might say more, or imply more. The mere act of renunciation by him would have the effect of saying more. Mr. Roosevelt might say in words, or by the manner of his action imply something like: "I conform to the usage of a hundred and fifty years; I uphold the venerated American tradition."

If that happened, at once the Democratic Party would make a virtue of the renunciation. They would go into the campaign as a party that had solemnly rejected a third term—rejected it at a time when they might have embraced it, and been successful in embracing it; when they might have re-elected Mr. Roosevelt, had they been willing to break the tradition.

IN SUCH a mood, swearing fidelity to the tradition as no party ever had before, and proving their faith in their works, the Democrats would tend to turn upon those Democrats who, preceding the convention, had indorsed the third term. Such Democrats, it would be said, had not only flouted the American tradition but impunged Mr. Roosevelt's honor.

Clearly, Democrats who now come out for a third term will be in a bad way if Mr. Roosevelt renounces a third term, or if the Democratic National Convention renounces it.

Now consider another group of Democrats, those who say they are against a third term. And then suppose another possible outcome of the national convention—suppose Mr. Roosevelt is renominated. What then would be the position of the antithird-term Democrats? Their situation would be bleak.

Today, facing the dreadful dilemma, Democrats adopt various devices. A few face it, bravely or quakingly. Some say they are against a third term. But it will be observed that most of the Senators who say this are ones who do not have to run this year. The brave words against a third term come mainly from Senators secure in their seats until 1942 or 1944. Some, taking the other horn, say they are for a third term. Others say merely that Mr. Roosevelt ought to say now whether he will try for a third term.

They say that, and they stop with that. Some adopt a formula that grants them temporarily the boon of silence or evasion; they say they do not believe Mr. Roosevelt wants a third term, and that therefore they are not called upon to take a position on it. Some, finding no formula for refuge, are just silent. But these will hardly be permitted to rest in their silence; hardly a Democrat can go through these primaries without being obliged to have a position on a third term.

TO THE CANDIDATES for the Democratic Presidential nomination, the dilemma is worst of all. Some of them, like Mr. McNutt, say they are candidates only provided Mr. Roosevelt is not a candidate. By saying that, Mr. McNutt implies he has no objection to a third term on principle. It is difficult to see how any "contingent candidate" can get the nomination. If Mr. Roosevelt takes it for himself, the contingent one is "out," as a matter of course. If Mr. Roosevelt does not take it, he thereby gives strength to the antithird-term tradition, and that to some degree disqualifies all who have said they see no objection to a third term.

One can hardly begin to list the embarrassments Mr. Roosevelt is putting upon his party. The condition will make trouble in practically every primary, in the national convention, and in the election afterward. Conceivably, in one outcome, it might lead to a bolt by some Democrats.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Of March, We Sing

Consider March.

It is a month of distinction. It is a figure in its own right. It is the great leveler. It makes all men equal.

It is a month that looks down on man on all planes of life and says "So you think you're somebody, eh?" . . and then blows his hat off!

All men are born equal, but it takes March to demonstrate it.

The captain of industry, bulging with importance, steps out of his eight-cylinder limousine, starts into his office building with that "make-way-for-a-god" manner and . . . zippo! . . . March whisks his bonnet off, musses up his hair and reduces him to a figure of futility.

The engineer who can stem waters, harness the tides and make the incredible come true, strides out of a major conference thinking "Oh, what a great man am I!" and . . whisk! . . . he is chasing his new fedora around a rubbish can.

P. Gideon Scudder, famous chairman of a Federal commission solving the problems of mankind in America, signs a new decree to end all further troubles . . . and what is he doing five minutes later? Pursuing his bonnet down a muddy gutter, a symbol of utter inefficiency.

In March even Harold Ickes is just a human being. John Hamilton and Jim Farley, makers of Presidents, are made to look as silly as Oscar Blotz and Gus the Bus. A candidate for the Presidency comes forth from an auditorium, all puffed up with importance, and in two shakes of the March lion's tail he is the Laugh of the Week. A Justice of the Supreme Court comes down the marble steps, an imposing figure of dignity and . . presto! . . . he is just a guy running in circles around a hydrant in pursuit of a black derby.

March cuts the dictators down to the right size.

It is the month when Stalin can easily be made to look unimportant and inadequate as Ivan the Itch.

It is the month when British statesmen can be made to look unusually comic. It is the month when Chamberlain can be gravely remarking "We must save the civilized world" one minute and crying "There it goes again!" to his own hat the next.

March looks the war lords, the diplomats, the world builders, the cosmos wreckers and the trust company vice presidents in the eye and barks "Drop that cloak of importance and chase that lid like anybody else!"

Hooray for March!

Oops! There it goes again!

Dr. Sizoo Returns to Preach Lenten Service Here

A throng of Washingtonians who long will remember Dr. Sizoo heard his sermon yesterday

The observance of Lent, greater here this year than last, as reflected by church attendance, brought Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo back to a Washington pulpit yesterday and his appearance, at the Church of the Epiphany, packed the pews.

The 30-minute noon service, signalized by the church chimes sounding above the traffic of G street, brought into the congregation hundreds of people who recalled Dr. Sizoo's pastorate here at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. From here in April, 1936, he went to the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, New York City.

He preached on faith, and the need for it. He said that just before the Lenten season he read the New Testament in its entirety and the one word that lingered was "faith," the word, he said, which "was the supreme anxiety of Christ and the supreme concern of the New Testament."

He held that it is impossible, in this world, to sustain life without it. It persists in all business enterprises, and was held by the world's great builders, such as the men who pushed the railroads across the wildernesses. The element, or the lack of it, goes into every transaction, he said.

Dr. Sizoo will be heard at the Church of the Epiphany at noon each day this week, through Friday. The services are open to the public.

Mary Haworth's Mail

If Married Couples Deny Themselves Children for Economic Reasons, Do They Later Regret It? Are Children Essential to Women's Happiness?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am an enthusiastic, faithful reader of your column and a sincere admirer of your judgment. Often you have given advice to unmarried girls who are to become mothers, so why not a little advice to married women? Tell us whether you think that having children is essential in marriage, granted, of course, normal, healthy parents?

Where the mother would be compelled for financial reasons to work after her child was born, do you think the added responsibility, expense, worry and perhaps overwork would be compensated for? Is an annual income of $2,000 a year enough to support a family, letting the mother stay home and tend the baby? What do you think means more to a woman?

Facing the fact that the husband's income probably will not increase and that the woman's child-bearing phase will last only a few years more, should she deny herself children? Do you think that married couples who have denied themselves children regret it later in life? Please don't answer these questions by saying it depends on the individual. Rather, give advice as to how essential children are to the average woman's happiness.

Perhaps some of your readers would like to give their opinions or experience. As you will appreciate, if you face facts (and I know that you do), this is a real puzzlement to modern vives who must work to supplement the family income. Your consideration of this question would interest and enlighten many persons, (more than are interested in the unmarried mother's problem). So please answer soon, through your column.

R. S. T.

Motherhood Pays Dividends To All Normal Women

DEAR R. S. T.: There is a folk saying that what we never have, we never miss. But on the other hand, persons who are richly blessed very often take their blessing for granted, and so miss the flavor of life's good gifts. This being true, it is scarcely possible to weigh and measure the importance of children to the average woman's happiness.

However, I think the normal woman consciously or unconsciously includes children in her theoretical specifications for a fully satisfactory life. When a woman desires children, yet fails to have them, it is probable that (a) either she will feel all along that life is cheating her; or (b) she will know a gnawing distress in later years, because she neglected to improve her opportunities in season.

There is a small percentage of women who might honestly report, if asked, that children were nonessential to their dream of happiness; they might even hold them to be potential detriments to happiness. And if they were childless women, the statement could be true, insofar as they were able, negatively, to know the truth about themselves.

Yet were these women to become mothers, under acceptable circumstances, they might discover (as a by-product of that experience) an overtone of joyousness in life which gave the complete lie to their prior supposition. There are some women who have children who are inclined lugubriously to question whether motherhood is a profitable investment in happiness. But if their children were to be taken from them, then would they begin belatedly to appreciate the blessing they had entertained, all unaware.

There is something in the normal woman's nature which rises with spontaneous elation to the experience of motherhood, whether or not she consciously realizes the fact. The reaction of the unmarried mother (cruelly afflicted as she is by her dislocated relation to conventional society) to the possibility of her unwanted child's being permanently relinquished to another's care, affords incontrovertible proof of this.

Although the illegitimate mother may give her child away, as a spasmodic defensive gesture, sooner or later she is overtaken by an overpoweringly urgent need to have him restored to her; or, at least, to gaze upon him once more; to know that he is well and happy. (There are isolated exceptions to this general rule, of course; cases of abnormal ugliness; but we are speaking of the "average" woman, whose experiences are "average.")

So I think the "compensatory" values of motherhood cannot be efficiently measured against an economic yardstic. Granted the capacity for "normal, healthy parenthood," a married couple who are weighing the advisability of having children should be less concerned with the sacrificial aspects of the proposition than with a consideration of their joint social ability to satisfy their heart's desire.

How much have they of character, of strength, of resourcefulness, to bring to this magnificent creative endeavor? If they've "got what it takes," of intelligence and stamina, to preserve in adversity and cope with emergencies as they arise, they may safely dare the adventure of parenthood, whatever their income. And what's more, they will do so, without inviting any outsider's opinions. Does this answer your questions? M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in so'ving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

The Gentler Sex

By MALVINA LINDSAY

'Watch the Birdie!'

WITH a large pile of photographic proofs beside her, Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey received reporters at her press conference yesterday.

Mrs. DeGoofey

"I have spent the entire week posing for photographs," announced the dauntless president of the Do Something About It League, "and here are the results."

"Are these for your Presidential campaign, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a political writer.

"Yes, they are to be distributed to newspapers and magazines in connection with my political campaign and my reform activities. I realize that this is an age of pictures, and while I cringe every time I see my photograph in the public prints, yet I feel it is my duty to put my causes above my natural modesty."

"What type of pose did you select?" asked an art critic.

"All types. The editors will be simply thrilled to death with them."

"Yes, indeed. I have several action series. One of these shows me accepting things—accepting a gavel, accepting a corsage, accepting a large bouquet, accepting a key to a city, accepting a Boston cream pie, accepting a baby giraffe, accepting a porcupine—"

"Haven't you anything—well more informal?" asked a city editor.

Candid Shots at The Spaghetti Bowl

"Yes, I have a very interesting series showing me eating. Now most public persons in their eating poses are only shown taking bites of hard rolls, or hot dog sandwiches, or bananas, or pickles, or brick ice cream. But I have done something more original. I have posed eating a chicken salad sandwich at a large tea and also handling a plate of spaghetti au gratin at a buffet supper."

"Bravo!" shouted a picture caption writer.

"Haven't you anything of a more picturesque nature?" asked a society editor.

"Yes, I have a series of poses in my silver foxes, together with animal pets, including everything from a Pekingese dog to an alligator. Then I have a pose of myself in a mink coat leaving a concert, a pose in my ermine wrap arriving at the theater, one in a garden hat beside a lily pool, one with half a dozen hat boxes beside an airplane, one as a Turkish cigarette girl at a charity bazaar, and of course, unlimited poses at Palm Beach."

"Any cheese cake pix?" asked a news photographer.

"Well, if you mean what I think you mean, I will say that I have several poses of myself sitting on a ship rail."

"Have you any stunning fashion poses, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a woman's page editor.

"Yes, I have a nice set of stills with my hand on my hip, also a series in which I am standing on the bias as though I had just had one Martini too many. I also have posed with the New York skyline, and the Washington Monument, beside the reflecting pool, under the cherry blossoms, also with backgrounds of stone pillars, marble stairways, statuary, paintings, etc."

"Haven't you any poses showing yourself as a career woman?" asked a sob sister.

"Yes, I have a series of desk poses showing me at the telephone, the typewriter, the comptometer, the adding machine, file cabinet, and also prostrate on the couch in the ladies' rest room.

"Neither have I forgotten my domestic poses. I have proofs here showing me among my books, my flowers, my kitchen pans. And I have showing me in my kitchen taking biscuits out of a can. What is more I have a pose at the bridge table, one under the permanent waving machine, and one doing a wall climbing exercise to reduce my hips."

"Just a minute, Mrs. DeGoofey," broke in a make-up editor. "I'm afraid you've forgotten the most important pose——"

"I'm coming to that," continued the intrepid reformer. It may relieve you, sir, to know that I have a complete set of kissing poses."

Loud applause from the reporters followed this announcement.

"Yes," continued Mrs. DeGoofey, "I have had myself photographed kissing every conceivable person that anyone could want—or stand—to kiss. I have posed in all types of kiss from the formal peck variety to the Hollywood clinch. What is more, I am leaving shortly for Utopia, Neb., my old home town, to round up all of my relatives to pose in another series of kissing stills so that I may keep all the newspapers fully supplied."

"Mrs. DeGoofey," asked a gossip columnist, "who posed with you in the er—more ardent kissing poses?"

"That is entirely too personal a question," was the rejoinder. "I am a very conservative woman when it comes to publicity."

Color Important In Easter Togs And Accessories

New York (AP).—Color is going to leave a bright mark on the clothes that smart women will wear this Easter.

When America's millions throng candle-lit churches for Easter morning services, gay flowered chapeaux, jeweled collarbone accents, colored gloves and bags aregoing to brighten more sober costumes, mingling in a fashion kaleidoscope. Only one or two splashes of color will appear with the smartest costumes, in line with fashion's commandment, "Don't overdo accents." But enough will be seen to give clothes a decidedly springlike air, in spite of the early date.

Color is going to be seen in clothes themselves, too, though these hues will be more subdued. Navy blue (big favorite again this year), gray, a grayed cadet blue, sand tones and brown are all going to be worn. A good deal of black is expected to be seen in smart pews, too. (Color in accents is likely to appear in something like a misty blue hyacinth hat or an emerald clip and vivid green gloves worn with a dark blue coat.)

You paint this and other fascinating subjects—such as "Treasure Ships at Sea" and "Old Windmill"—by simple method.

Over your design, already printed on paper, you lay a piece of glass the same size. Then you paint—following the design which shows through the glass.

Your paints? You need only three inexpensive tubes of oil paints—red, blue and yellow. These you mix according to a simple chart to get any color you wish. For lighter tones, add white household enamel; for darker tones, black household enamel. Green, for instance, you make by mixing blue and yellow. Pink, by mixing red and white.

In painting the early evening scene of "Skyscrapers," use for the tallest buildings deep blue-purple, shading to violet. Buildings of middle height you outline in dark brown, green, red or black. Low buildings near the water are pale pink, warm gray.

The trees are dark green, the boat reddish black, the water blue-purple and the sky gray-blue. To get the glowing effect of lighted windows, slip gold paper behind the glass before framing.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Divorce Impending, Mrs. James Roosevelt Buys Herself a Hat

New York, March 4.

ONE of the old traditions, or gags, is that when a woman is a bit low in her mind she should dash out and buy a new hat, even if it runs over the budget. This is the feminine version of the old male theory that a man, in such a spot, should gallop to the corner store and grab a couple of quick ones, which is a fly-blown fallacy, of course. He just gets lower and lower.

Alice Hughes

Dropping into one of my favorite hangouts, the elegant atelier of Messieurs John-Frederic, I found the lovely Betsey Cushing Roosevelt cheerfully choosing a new hat. A divorcee from James Roosevelt was impending, so there was this beautiful Boston girl applying the old treatment. I hope it worked fine. Her good looks have a luminous quality that is really fascinating, and her manner was gay and easy as she looked over the chapeaux. She finally chose a Javanese type of hat, just a black straw band around the head, with a mass of red poppies at the back of the neck. Very becoming, I thought it. With her was Margaret "Missy" LeHand, who was wearing a frivolous postage-stamp headpiece.

There's no place like a swell but casual New York hat salon to see and talk with people. A few tables away from Betsey was Gloria Swanson, still a stunner, who finally chose two hats—a saucy burned-straw sailor with a high crown and a red rose, and a Spanishy white lace bonnet, something like a mantilla. Gloria was wearing a gray-striped-wool tailored suit. Still another customer at the time was Muriel Hutchinson, tall, languorous blonde, who appeared in "The Women."

Easter Frocks and Suits Require Pared Down Waists

Eight Pounds, Maximum Weight That Can Be Lost; Exercises for Midriff Should Supplement Wisely Chosen Diet

By Ida Jean Kain

EASTER comes early this year. It is less than three weeks off. And when you slip into your new spring suit for the Easter parade, you are going to view your figure in a very much colder light than when ti was swathed in your winter furs.

If you are to get into trim in time you haven't a day to waste! You cannot do much reducing—8 pounds, at the most. But a loss of 8 pounds can make a delightful improvement in your looks, particularly if backed with the exercises that slim the midriff. Nothing ruins a suit like a thick midriff!

To lose weight quickly and safely, go on the 21-day diet, which restricts the calorie intake to 1,000 per day. These menus must be supplemented with the Vitamin A, B, C, G capsule daily to assure an optimum diet. The capsules supply vitamins without calories, and are a great help to the reducer who is in a hurry.

Watch That Exercise

To do the most for your figure, your emergency exercise program must be exactly suited to your particular needs. But, more than likely, you will want the exercises which pare down the midriff. Here is an exercise on which you can rely:

POSITION: Standing erect with the arms straight out at sides, shoulder level.

MOVEMENT: Keep the shoulders relaxed, the arms outstretched at the sides, and bend very slowly to the left side, twisting around to the left as you bend, concentrating the action in the midsection. The stretch-bend incorporated in this exercise is the quickest way of slimming off waistline inches. After you have twisted to the left as far as possible, resume the beginning position, then bend to the right.

Never try to sprint through a stretching exercise. If you do you will destroy the benefits to be derived. The action should be slow and deliberate. The second exercise tones waist and abdominal muscles. If you have not been doing it you should have—it's an exercise that belongs in every figure program.

Here's How It's Done

POSITION: Lying flat on the back on the floor, knees flexed and together, feet on the floor up near the buttocks. Rest hands on waist. waist.

MOVEMENT: Keeping back as flat on floor as possible, twist vigorously, touching the thighs to the floor, first on one side, then on the other. Keep the feet on the floor. Do the exercising slowly and precisely for 50 counts, pausing to rest between each 10 counts.

The third exercise is the side-bicycle, which includes waist, abdomen and hips:

POSITION: Lying on floor on left side, head pillowed on left arm, right hand out in front of body, chest level, on floor for support. Have the legs extended straight out with the right leg on top.

MOVEMENT: Pedal! Draw alternately legs close up to chest, then shoot straight down! Continue for 50, then 100, then 150 counts.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt Honored at Dinner by Cabinet

Affair Marks Inaugural Anniversary, Brings Beat of Broadway to Banks Of the Potomac; 48 Seated at Table

By Hope Ridings Miller

THE PRESIDENT AND MRS. ROOSEVELT were guests of honor at a dinner given last evening by members of the Cabinet in celebration of his first inauguration.

An annual fete arranged by the Chief Executive's official family, the party was accented with star-spangled glamour from beginning to end. A superb menu and a gay company were features of the party, which was rounded out with a snappy program that brought the best of Broadway to the banks of the Potomac. In fact, the party had everything . . . including the Brazilian bombshell, Carmen Miranda, who is currently appearing at the National Theater in "The Streets of Paris."

The President's mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt, sr., the Vice President and Mrs. John Nance Garner and all members of the Cabinet, with the exception of Secretary of Commerce Hopkins, were in the company of 48, seated at a long table in the Carlton room of the Carlton Hotel. Several former members of the official family also were in the group which assembled in the north drawing room at 8 o'clock, and was served with hors d'ouvres and sherry during the reception preceding the dinner.

Tall bouquets of pink carnations and pink and yellow roses decorated the drawing room. Pink, white and green were combined in the color scheme carried out in the dining room, where pink snapdragons stemmed from vases on side tables, which were further set by fruit-filled urns.

White blossoms—sweet peas, roses, snapdragons and stock framed with maidenhair fern—filled a silver bowl centering the long table. Arranged on a flower-fringed mirror, the bouquet was flanked with four silver pheasants. Two tall silver vases and two low bowls, alternating with clusters of white tapers in silver candelabra, were used to complete the decorative picture.

The scarlet-coated Marine Band, playing on a balcony throughout the dinner, added an extra dash of color to the party, which was further enhanced by the presence of a complete corps of waiters (one for every six guests) trimly turned out in burgundy coats, set off with gold buttons and gold chains, worn only for the most important occasions.

The hotel got out its choicest wines for the party. Sauterne topped off the terrapin course. Burgundy went on the board along with the pheasant. Champagne was served with the cheese, and a variety of liquers added the final touch to the menu when, following the dinner, the company moved into the Shar-Zad room, for the floor show.

With Eddie Dowling, actor-producer, in charge 12 artists were on the entertainment list, including Sheila Barrett, impersonator, Patricia Bowman, dancer; Kitty Carlisle, singer; Carmen Miranda, Lauretie Taylor, Stella Adler, Barbara Fritchie, Dr. Giovanni, Milli Monti, Dean Murphy, Casper Reardon and Dana Suesse.

The complete list of those attending, in addition to President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Vice President and Mrs. Garner, and the President's mother, included Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull, the latter of whom was in charge of arrangements; Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Morgenthau, Secretary of War and Mrs. Woodring, Attorney General and Mrs. Jackson, Postmaster General and Mrs. Farley, Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Edison, Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Ickes, Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Wallace, Secretary of Labor, Frances Perkins.

The former Attorney General, now Supreme Court Justice Murphy, was there, as were Mrs. George H. Dern, whose late husband was Secretary of War; Mr. and Mrs. Stephen T. Early, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, Miss Marguerite A. LeHand, Miss Malvina C. Thompson, Mrs. James M. Helm, Frederic A. Delano, uncle of the President; Henry Morgenthau, sr., Mrs. Louis McHenry Howe, who is a house guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt; former Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Danial C. Roper, and former Attorney General Homer S. Cummings.

Earlier yesterday Mrs. Roosevelt negotiated a crowded schedule, which included a press conference at 9:30 a. m., attendance at church, then visits to Gallinger Hospital and the preview of the Rubenstein collection of modern art at the Mayflower Hotel.

Mrs. Roosevelt will be in New York today, returning to Washington tomorrow. She will attend a leap year dance for the benefit of the Thrift Shop tomorrow night and Friday morning will speak in the Town Hall lecture series. Later that day she will have luncheon with the League of Women Voters at the Willard Hotel.

The annual stunt party of the Women's National Press Club is on her calendar for Saturday evening and the following evening she will leave for a one-week lecture tour. Several points in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois will be included on her tour. Her next press conference is set for 11 a. m., March 18.

Harris & Ewing

The Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, and Princess Hohenlohe, wife of the Attache of the Polish Embassy, view a portrait of their hostess at the art exhibit given by Prince and Princess Gourielli-Tchkonia yesterday for Polish relief. This painting, incidentally, was the ambassador's favorite

Caseys Honor Drew Dudley With Party

Entertaining in the old Alexandria home—built in 1790—which they have leased for the season, Representative and Mrs. Joseph E. Casey feted Mrs. Casey's brother, Drew Dudley, of Chicago, at a cocktail party yesterday afternoon.

It was a small party. The guests for the most part were friends of Mr. Dudley when he was here with the NRA. Receiving with her daughter was Mrs. Charles Howard Dudley, of Hanover, N. H., who arrived to visit the Caseys on Sunday and will leave today for her home. She will be accompanied by another son, Robert Dudley, who has been here for the past week.

Many Notables Among Guests

This lovely red-brick home which the Caseys have leased was restored six years ago. Of typical colonial architecture, the house is just across the street from the John L. Lewis' home, where Robert E. Lee went to school. Gen. Lee's aunt and uncle were supposed to have lived in the Casey home.

Yesterday the colonial house was abloom with spring flowers and the hostess wore an attractive gown of the palest blue crepe, sprinkled now and then with glittering sequins.

Stopping in during the afternoon were the Turkish Ambassador and Mme. Ertegun, the Ecuadorian Ambassador and Senora de Alfaro, Senator and Mrs. D. Worth Clark, Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper, Col. and Mrs. Charles March, Mrs. George Thorpe and Representative and Mrs. Bruce Barton.

Several There From Congress Set

Representative and Mrs. Jerry Voorhis were among the guests, as were Lady Bradford Leslie, Judge and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, Norton Goodwin, Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Watson, the Minister of Latvia and Mme. Bilmania, Representative and Mrs. Phil Ferguson, the Misses Mary and Betty Wright, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Tate, Mr. and Mrs. Bulkley Griffin, Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Hoidredge, Edward Van Devanter, Miss Lydia Loring, Dr. and Mrs. Oscar Albertini, Miss Marguerite Montero, Anthony Montero, Mrs. John Rust Potter and Mr. and Mrs. David Shaw.

Hundreds of D. C. Notables See Polish Aid Art Exhibit

Preview at Mayflower Draws Notables; Rubinstein Collection Inspected by Many; Diplomatic, Official Set Much in Evidence

By Carolyn Bell.

BIZARRE MODERN ART and Polish relief had society, from the First Lady on down, out yesterday at the preview exhibit given by Prince and Princess Gourielli-Tchkonia yesterday afternoon at the Mayflower Hotel in honor of the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki.

Virtually the first caller was Mrs. Roosevelt, who dashed in at 5 o'clock, took a turn around the exhibit, and was out again to keep another appointment. Over her black frock she wore a silver fox cape. A profile hat and two strands of pearls completed her smart costume.

Guests had been asked to view this unusual exhibition of modern paintings, drawings and primitive African sculpture from the collection of Helena Rubinstein. Interest also seemed to circle around the 20-foot buffet table, as well as the bar. Red and white gladioli centered the table, where a variety of tea-time food was placed. Red and white gladioli were used throughout the East room where the party was held.

Pouring at the tea table was attractive Mme. Kwapiszewska, wife of the Counselor of the Polish Embassy, while at the other end was Countess Lasocka. A knot of white violets drooped over the cunning hat worn by Countess Lasocka, wife of the Polish Embassy Attache.

Hostess Wears Wine-Red Gown

Prince and Princess Gourielli-Tchkonia greeted their guests just inside the door. Princess Gourielli wore a wine-red ensemble for the occasion with many strands of pearls and brilliant earrings completing the costume. Guests admired a number of portraits of their hostess on view. Particularly striking was the sequin-studded painting by Tchelitchew.

Taking their art seriously were Mabel Boardman, wearing a silver fox scarf over her gown; Count Potocki, who seemed immensely interested in one particular portrait of Princess Gourielli; Mrs. McCook Knox and the Minister of Switzerland and Mme. Bruggmann, who were rather late arrivals. Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold put in one of his rare appearances at afternoon parties. He was joined later by Mrs. Arnold, who wore a fetching turban, trimmed in red blossoms.

Several debutantes were on hand to give out programs. Miss Patricia Hurley, who was wearing a slate blue crepe frock and a hat made entirely of currants, wandered about sipping milk. Miss Marilynn Himes wore a lipstick red faille frock and Senorita Yolanda Alfaro had a creamy gardenia pinned to her gown.

Secretary Perkins Attends Exhibit

Secretary of Labor Perkins seemed quite interested in the exhibit as did Senator Alexander K. Wiley, Mme. Hurban, wife of the Czecho-Slovak Minister, Mrs. Hennen Jennings, Mrs. Frank Simonds, Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Mrs. Prew Savoy, Mrs. John J. Dempsey and Mrs. Mike Monroney.

Wearing a stunning outfit was Princess Hohenlohe, who was accompanying her husband, the Attache of the Polish Embassy. Representative Caroline O'Day was there, as were Lyle Brookover, Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, with a bright red hat; Mrs. James Lawrence Houghteling in a deep blue-green suit and matching hat. Arriving together were Mrs. Dean Acheson, soignee in all black, and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, who wore a fur jacket over her outfit. Others there were Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, the Misses Pauletta and Ida Guffey, Mrs. William Shearer, Mlle. Mala, wearing a turquoise hat, Mrs. Paul Lutes and Baron and Baroness Wrangell.

The exhibition will be open to the public today and tomorrow.

Thrift Ball to Open With Arrival Of Mrs. Roosevelt

The Thrift Shop's "Leap Year Ball" will be officially under way tomorrow evening at the Sulgrave Club, when Mrs. Roosevelt puts in her appearance as honorary patroness. Met at the door by the floor committee chairman, George Angus Garrett, and his aides, she will be escorted up the stairs to Mrs. John R. Williams and the presidents of the Thrift Shop's six member boards.

In the line with Mrs. Williams will be Mrs William J. Flather, Children's Hospital; Mrs. Joseph H. Himes, Children's Country Home; Mrs. Lewis C. Ecker, Columbia Hospital; Mrs. Frederick A. Solger, Child Welfare; Miss Cecil Lester Jones, Junior League, and Mrs. John S. Flanner, St. John's Orphanage.

Serving with Mr. Garrett on the floor committee are Admiral George Pettengill, Joseph McCammon, Hugh Auchincloss, Gen. Edwin Watson, John Caswell, jr., Myron A. Hofer, Chauncey Parker, Admiral Emory Land, McKee Dunn, Thomas Leiter, Nelson Perin, James Dunn, Philip Coffin and Paul Bastedo.

Souvenir of the event will be the program on which Mrs. Williams and her program group have been working for days. Proceeds will go toward new equipment and facilities for the organizations which are taking part.

Dinner Given Here By Miss Clement

Miss Elizabeth Clement, who, with Miss Julia Holland, recently arrived here from Rutland, Vt., entertained at dinner last evening at the Dodge Hotel, where she is spending a few days.

Guests were Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Webb, Miss Marion B. Webb and William D. Hassett.

Miss Clement is the daughter of the late Percival Clement, who was Governor of Vermont.

Mrs. Symington Coming to See Parents Here

Mrs. Stuart Symington will arrive tomorrow from St. Louis, Mo., to visit her parents, Representative and Mrs. James Wadsworth, at their home on N street, in Georgetown. Mrs. Wadsworth is convalescing from an operation at Emergency Hospital.

Since early last fall Mr. and Mrs. Symington have been making their home in St. Louis, where Mr. Symington was transferred. It was then that Eve Symington was forced to give up her career as songstress in the Sert Room of the Waldorf-Astoria. The daughter of Representative and Mrs. Wadsworth was among the first social lights to take up night club singing with success.

Mrs. Robert Low Bacon Entertains Friends With Films From European Trip

LAST SUMMER on a tour of the Baltic countries Mrs. Robert Low Bacon leaned out of train windows in Sweden with her camera, ground away from boat decks in the Norwegian fjords, and evaded organized and propagandized tours through Danzig to snatch films of life there. In Russia, when she learned that all films taken by foreigners must be turned over to the government for processing and possible confiscation, she simply trolled out of the Soviet with the rolls of films tucked in her pocketbook.

Put together and called "Baltic Backgrounds," the pictures have been shown by Mrs. Bacon to groups of friends throughout the winter. Yesterday others gathered at her home to see views in color of stadiums which the Finns were building for the 1940 Olympics during the prebomb months, the parks and playgrounds of Leningrad before that city became a hospital base for the wounded, and throngs of Danes sipping tea in genteel fashion on a summer afternoon near the ocean.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth dropped in, wearing a black coat trimmed with Persian lamb over her dress. Mrs. Bruce Barton poured tea for a while—she has just returned to Washington from her home near New York. Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge, in a green wool dress; Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Warren Austin, a bit breathless as she had also sandwiched in a visit to the art exhibit for Polish relief at the Mayflower; Mrs. Charles M. Lea, and several others were guests.

MISS IVY BACON, attractive young daughter of the house, poured tea in the high-ceilinged dining room of the old house on F street, which has been the home of three Supreme Court Justices—Fuller, Marshall and Story. Calla lilies in enormous glass vases were in the drawing room, with its red damask curtains and red rugs.

CARMEN MIRANDA gave a special bow in the direction of the box occupied last night by the Brazilian Ambassador and Senhora de Martins. After the show the envoy and his wife rushed backstage to congratulate their compatriot on one of the best performances seen here this season.

Latin Americans were not the only ones in the audience. Justice and Mrs. William O. Douglas shared a box with several friends. Seen in a very crowded lobby were Mme. Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador; Miss Patricia Hurley with her fiance, Dr. Henry Gwynn, Mrs. Hugh O'Donnell with Christopher Bramwell, John Stonborough with a blonde lady, Win Crane, Bill McAvoy, Mrs. Anthony Crane and loads of others.

FOLLOWING in the Roberts' wake to Mexico City are the Belgian Counselor and Baroness de Gruben, Miss Betty van der Straten Bonthoz, daughter of the Belgian envoy, and Mr. and Mrs. John Newbold. They left yesterday by motor and will visit Count and Countess Roberti at their new post. Before leaving last week the Robertis were presented with a silver loving cup by their Washington friends.

Jean Lehman Plights Troth

Of wide interest in Washington is the announcement of Miss Jean Lehman's betrothal to Gordon Frost, of San Diego, Calif. The daughter of Commander and Mrs. Hubert J. Lehman, the bride-elect is a graduate of Stanford University and a member of Alpha Phi sorority.

Mr. Frost is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Frost, of San Diego. He finished at Stanford University in 1938, a year earlier than his fiancee. He belongs to Beta Theta Pi fraternity and was editor of the Stanford Daily.

The wedding will take place in California in the summer.

O. H. Hammond, Jr., Back From Reich

The United States Vice Consul at Leipzig, Ogden H. Hammond, jr., a son of the former United States Ambassador to Spain, is among the passengers who arrived in New York yesterday aboard the Washington.

Donald W. Brown, Vice Consul at Vienna, also was aboard the Washington. Both Mr. Hammond and Mr. Brown are expected to come here later in the week.

Presidential Candidates of Pen Women Conduct March Meeting of Board

TWO presidential candidates (so far as the elections of the National League of American Pen Women are concerned) conducted the league's March board meeting yesterday morning at the Willard Hotel. They were Mrs. May West Owen, of Denver, fourth vice president, who presided in the absence of Mrs. Audrey Wurdemann Auslander, the president, and Mrs. Edna Knight Gasch, of Washington, parliamentarian.

They were an amiable and able team and all went smoothly at the meeting, at which plans for the April convention were discussed. At this session they will oppose each other for the national presidency.

Mrs. William M. Greene, of Kennebunk, Me., historian, had with her the book of clippings submitted by the league branches throughout the country. The section devoted to each State is introduced by a water-color painting of the State flower which is her work.

Others at the meeting were Mrs. Frances Sperry Burton, of Baltimore, candidate for treasurer; Mrs. Margie Luckett, third vice president, also of Baltimore; Mrs. Josephine Chandler Horner, of Washington, candidate for first vice president; Mrs. Lulu G. Geise, of Pittsburgh, radio chairman, who addressed the local branch last night at a meeting arranged by Mrs. Victoria Faber Stevenson.

Others included Miss Clara Manderschied, recording secretary; Mrs. Stevenson, who is a past national president; Mrs. Claudia Rice Scott, corresponding secretary;; Mrs. Marion Needham Taft, treasurer; Mrs. Tomas Cajigas, social chairman and candidate for corresponding secretary; Mrs. Nell V. Somerville Howorth, president of the Business and Professional Women's Club, presided last night at its executive meeting at the Admiral. She arrived just in time to conduct the session. She left following the club's last business meeting for a vacation at her home in Cleveland, Miss. She spoke February 27 at a meeting of the Cleveland B. and P. W. Club, with delegates from every club in northern Mississippi attending. Then she went to Greenville, her birthplace, and en route to Washington stopped in Bristol, Tenn., to confer with Lucia Thompson, President of the B. and P. W. club there on plans for the regional conference at which the Bristol club will be hostess Labor Day. Washington is in the Southern region.

EASTER PLANS—There will be colored eggs at Gospel Mission and gifts for the residents of the Old Ladies' Home of Georgetown at Easter. The Sunshine and Community Society, at its meeting yesterday, voted to provide a crate of eggs to be colored for distribution at the Gospel Mission with baskets for the children, and also an appropriation for gifts to the Georgetown home.

Mrs. W. W. Deal, president of the society, presided for the first time since her illness.

Mrs. E. L. Burton, of the hospital aid committee, reported that cigarettes, bedside bags and magazines had been provided to Walter Reed Hospital; Mrs. Edwin Dice announced the plans for the Easter donation to the mission and Mrs. E. J. Dowling, chairman of benevolence, reported a family with six children had been given food and clothing during the month.

The society voted a contribution to the blood bank and also discussed plans for a benefit card party Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Adolph Volk, 4338 Reno road.

A letter from Mrs. Ella S. Knight, founder of the society, now with her daughter in Florida, says she is improving in health.

MEET AT HOSPICE—The National Woman's Club met yesterday at the Girls Hospice, 1525 Sixteenth street, for a luncheon and business session. Mrs. Charles P. Keyser, the president, presided. Mrs. A. L. Rheinstrom, chairman of the proposed girls' club project in Georgetown, reported growing interest in it. An effort is being made by the club to enlist cooperation in some plan to keep the children off the street.

Mrs. McAllister Speaks to Women

Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, director of the women's division of the Democratic National Committee, spoke at the Monday luncheon of the Woman's National Democratic Club at their headquarters at 1526 New Hampshire avenue, yesterday.

Introduced by Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, Mrs. McAllister, recalling the date was the seventh anniversary of the inauguration of Franklin D. Roosevelt and the New Deal, declared "within this time, our Government has made more progress for the general welfare and for equality of opportunity than has ever been made in any comparable period. New frontiers have opened, new vistas of how democracy can advance human well being."

Bondy Urges D. C. System Of Temporary Foster Homes

Robert Bondy, director of the Board of Public Welfare, told the child welfare department of the Voteless D. C. League of Women Voters yesterday that there was "an urgent need" for a system of subsidized temporary foster homes for children in the District.

Under the present method, he said, the board has no alternative but to send children who fall under its care to the Receiving Home for Children. "We must either do that," he said, "or leave them on the streets. We have no other choice."

In urging the system of subsidized foster homes, Bondy said he looked forward to the time when the Board of Public Welfare would have a child welfare consultant, working with it, when an adequate program to care for indigent children could be worked out. He added that an adequate staff at Juvenile Court would help to reduce the number of youngsters who are now sent to the Receiving Home.

Mrs. Paul Appleby, chairman of the child welfare department of the league, introduced, following Bondy, Miss Beatrice McConnell, director of the Industrial Division of the Children's Bureau. Miss McConnell read H. R. 8694, to amend the act passed in 1928 regulating the employment of minors in the District.

Plumley Attacks Statements That U. S. Colleges Need 'Reds'

Mount Holyoke Head Is Target in Talk To G. O. P. Women

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Representative Charles A. Plumley, of Vermont, addressing the League of Republican Women, yesterday scored "irresponsible utterances" such as that by Dr. Roswell Gray Ham, of Mount Holyoke College, that "every college needs a few Reds."

Representative Plumley, in addition to attacking Dr. Ham's statement, condemned one by Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago: "The trouble with American college youths is that they are much too apathetic. They certainly can stand more Communists in their midst . . . They mellow as they grow up and turn into conservative oldsters."

"The trouble with that statement is that it is not true," said Representative Plumley. "A mellow apple rots, as everybody knows. It not only rots, but by contact contaminates the other apples in the barrel. The rotten spot in it is a 'rotten spot,' and it spreads. A rotten apple, is a rotten apple, first, last and all the time. And a rotten American is a rotten American.

"What we need is hand-picked American citizens disinfected against rot of fascism, communism or any other 'ism' which is anti-Americanism. It is just a cheap play for publicity for anybody in such a high place to make such an intellectually dishonest and un-American statement.

Lindley Column In The Post Quoted

"Those who undertake to make light of the situation that confronts us, and who would straddle or evade the issue, are either too ignorant to realize what confronts them, or too indifferent to care. Those who breathe treason always do so ignorantly, insidiously, affably, but dangerously, in their approach.

"You are either for America and for our form of Government 100 per cent or you are against it."

Representative Plumley called attention to the comments of columnists and editorial writers throughout the country on the behavior of the American Youth Congress. Among those he quoted was Ernest Lindley, in his column in The Post that: "The American Youth Congress has washed itself up as an effective political force. After its performance in Washington this week it will be listened to just about as seriously as Earl Browder."

"I am no alarmist and I know that if the American people can be aroused to a realizing sense of where they stand there is no prospect of a blackout of freedom in America. There is, however, a danger of a fade out, as a result of those policies and pressures which threaten individualism and free enterprise here and everywhere. You will recall that people in other countries have gained civil and religious liberty only after they have fought for and won the right to conduct free business enterprise and to assert their individuality.

"Here in the United States, today, we must for ourselves, either maintain free enterprise or accept the alternative and by so doing contribute to the complete breakdown and destruction of the democratic ideal and concept of government."

His address at the league's March meeting at the Mayflower Hotel followed a business session at which Mrs. Edward Everett Gann was nominated for another term as president and Mrs. Virginia White Speel, founder, as honorary president of the league.

Other officers nominated for the coming year were Mrs. Gilbert H. Grosvenor, Mrs. James G. Wentz, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mrs. William S. Culbertson, Mrs. William O. Gilbert and Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, vice presidents; Mrs. E. S. Kochersperger, recording secretary; Mrs. James C. Wilkes, assistant secretary; Miss Grace Burton, treasurer; Mrs. Hugh M. Southgate, assistant treasurer; Mrs. William H. Scott, corresponding secretary; Mrs. E. E. Quayle, assistant corresponding secretary; directors, Mrs. Henry Albers, Mrs. Paris E. Brengle, Mrs. Ralph D. Brewster, Mrs. M. Webster Dawley, Mrs. Warren J. Haines, Mrs. Howard S. Le Roy, Mrs. William H. Mondell, Mrs. Maurice H. Thatcher, Miss Daisy M. Prentice and Mrs. G. Louis Weller.

Horse Racing Opposed 2-1 By Citizens

Natural Gas Use In District Favored; ABC Proceedings Are Discussed

Legalized horse racing in the District was opposed by two citizens associations last night while a third went on record in favor of the sport.

Other matters which seven associations considered included substitution of natural gas for artificial gas in the District, proceedings of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, street cleaning and noise abatement and increased automobile taxes.

Georgetown Progressive

The Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown voted to oppose wide powers which would be given to the District Commissioners in the reorganization bill now before Congress and to oppose any changes affecting the Welfare Board, Public Library Board, Board of Education or licensing authorities.

Capt. Rhoda Milliken of the Women's Bureau was the principal speaker in a discussion of better recreational facilities for Georgetown girls between the ages of 15 and 20.

Capt. Milliken pointed out that greater use could be made of such existing facilities as churches, schools and settlement houses and stressed importance of providing a wide variety of recreational opportunities.

Trained supervisors, whether paid or volunteer, are a prime necessity, Capt. Milliken said.

Dupont Circle

Committees to investigate street cleaning and noise abatement in the city were named yesterday by the Dupont Circle Citizens Association, meeting at the Mayflower Hotel.

Following a round-table discussion on noise abatement, led by E. S. Fuller, the organization voted to investigate restrictive laws in other cities. Particular complaint was made about automobile horns. Another discussion, led by Essie Vaughan, dealt with the Overton plan for lump-sum Government contributions to the cost of District government.

District streets were described as being dirtier today than ten years ago in a forum led by Frederick H. Brooke. Boy and Girl Scouts will be asked to make a spot map of trash containers distributed through the city. The association would like to see visible containers placed at alternate street corners.

Manor Park Citizens

Approval of the action of the Alcohol Beverage Control Board in denying a liquor license to Leo Rossiter and opposition to the increased personal property tax on autos and to beer and liquor advertising on the radio were expressed in resolutions adopted by the Manor Park Citizens Association last night.

The association, meeting at Whittier School, named Daniel B. Lloyd, president, to a committee on arrangements for the annual joint banquet with the Whittier Parent-Teacher Association April 23. Mrs. Paul Gottwals will represent the P.-T. A. on the committee.

Kenilworth Citizens

The Kenilworth Citizens Association recommended to the Public Utilities Commission that natural gas be substituted for artificial gas in the District. Charles M. Maize, president of the association and chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, was instructed to confer with William McK. Clayton, of the Federation of Citizens Associations on the high price of fuel.

The association went on record in opposition to the Reynolds bill to legalize horse racing.

An extensive campaign in the neighborhood to support the Metropolitan Police Boys Club was advocated and Jack Alexander was appointed to lead the drive.

Columbia Heights

The Columbia Heights Citizens Association voted in favor of the Reynolds bill to legalize horse betting after members pointed out racing would produce considerable revenue. They denied attraction of bettors and other race track followers would have a detrimental influence on the city. "The same people are here anyway" attending races at nearby Maryland tracks, it was argued.

The unit favored reorganization of the District Government on the basis of a city manager and elective council.

Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, former superintendent of the National Training School for Girls, addressed the meeting.

Takoma Park, D. C.

The Citizens Association of Takoma Park, D. C., voted unanimously against proposed legislation for legalizing horse racing.

Wallace C. Magathan was nominated for presidency of the association. Others nominated for office were Bruce E. Anderson, first vice president; Lewis A. Jones, second vice president; William M. Greene, recording secretary; Carl C. King, corresponding secretary. Greene was proposed as delegate to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

The unit voted confidence in Thomas E. Lodge, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, and criticized recent Congressional investigation of two cases still under jurisdiction of the board.

Forest Hills

Race track operation in the District and location of liquor stores in the vicinity of parks met opposition from the Forest Hills Citizens Association last night.

In the racing resolution, the association, meeting at the Ben W. Murch School, expressed gratitude to Commissioners Hazen and Allen for opposing legislation to legalize horse betting in the Capital.

Mr. and Mrs. William P. Bartell, 2932 Davenport street northwest, were admitted to association membership.

Transit Company Seeks to Cut Takoma, Silver Spring Service

Burtonville Line Also Mentioned In Request to Maryland Commission; Sanitarium Protests Proposed Change

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, March 4.—The Capital Transit Co. of Washington today asked the public service commission's approval of plans to discontinue service on parts of four bus lines in suburban areas across the District line in Maryland.

The company said the changes would be effective April 1. The curtailment was necessary, it said, because so few used the buses in the four areas.

The commission wrote E. D. Merrill, company president, that the discontinuances would be "subject to investigation by the commission, either upon complaint or on its own motion, and if protest is received it may become necessary to assign the matter for hearing."

A protest was received today from J. H. Nies, manager of the Washington Sanitarium. The institution would lose a bus service through its grounds by the company's plan.

The services to be discontinued are:

That portion of the Takoma bus line operating through Sligo Valley.

The portion of the East Silver Spring bus line between the intersection of Sligo and Flower avenues and Clifton Park.

The Burtonville bus line which operates between the District-Maryland line at Georgia avenue and Burtonsville, Md., via U. S. highway No. 29 and Maryland highway No. 196.

That portion of the Takoma bus line which operates through the Washington Sanitarium grounds between Carroll avenue and Flower avenue in Takoma.

The company said a count of patrons using that portion of the Burtonsville service it proposed to discontinue showed that there were but 0.37 passengers per mile.

A day's check of the other three areas, the company said, showed that:

On the line through Sligo Valley, only three passengers boarded and four alighted in the area not served by the main line.

On the East Silver Spring line, in 11 trips there were but 13 passengers "having their origins and/or destination in the section east of Flower avenue."

On the Takoma bus line 50 trips were made through the sanitarium grounds and 48 passengers boarded and 63 alighted at the stop within the grounds during the day.

The protest from Nies read in part:

"In our opinion there is no added expense to the Transit Company to turn into our private grounds and then back out again onto the street, and we therefore feel that this service should not be discontinued."

Truck Driver Saved by Leap In Explosion

Ernest Sisson, 41, of Alexandria, Va., escaped with a scratched ear yesterday when 1,935 gallons of gasoline exploded a few seconds after he got out of the cab of a tank truck which overturned near Annandale, Va.

Sisson told Fairfax County police he was forced off Little River turnpike a half mile east of Annandale, by an automobile approaching head-on. His huge semitrailer truck plowed into the mud of a soft shoulder, rolled over three times and plunged to a stop 100 feet from the road in an apple orchard.

Immediately behind the truck was Stanley L. Minor, of Annandale, who leaped from his automobile and rushed to the wrecked tanker. He saw flames creeping along the truck's propeller shaft and called to Sisson, still in the cab, to leap clear.

Hardly had the driver freed himself than the flames enveloped the tank and a terrific explosion followed. Minor and Sisson were hurled to the ground but were unhurt.

In Annandale Sisson had delivered 500 gallons of gasoline to a filling station.

Fort McHenry Attacked; This Time by Termites

Baltimore, March 4 (AP).—Old Fort McHenry, birthplace of the National Anthem during a vigorous British shelling in the war of 1812, is under attack again.

McCoach Advocates Scholarships to Allow Firemen to Study Outside, Teach in Capital

Rev. H. A. Kester Toastmaster Stein Commissioner McCoach Fire Chief Porter

Scholarships which will allow District firemen to study fire-fighting conditions in other cities and return to Washington as instructors were urged last night by Engineer Commissioner McCoach at the annual dinner of Master Masons of the Fire Department at the Mayflower Hotel.

Describing the District Fire Department as "first rate," McCoach said, "if we do not have a first-rate organization, we have none at all."

Leadership, morale and training in periods of nonactivity are the chief causes for Washington's efficient organization, he said.

"Fire loss in Washington is tremendously low," declared Col. McCoach. He commented on the city's high national rating in fire records, and said "even then the qualities of leadership are not taken into consideration in the ratings."

He commended the preventive measures employed by the Fire Department as "one of the chief reasons for the city's excellent record."

More than 100 Masons of the department attended last night's banquet. Toastmaster was Lieut. Elmer F. Stein. The Rev. Hirl A. Kester, pastor of the Congress Street Methodist Church, delivered the invocation and benediction.

Chief Stephen T. Porter, Headquarters Superintendent Herbert Friedl and Corporation Counsel Milton D. Korman were among those attending.

Council Unit Backs New Child Laws

Social Agency Urges Court Reform, Demands House Hearing

Proposed legislation to prohibit placement of children by unlicensed agencies and to reform procedure of the Juvenile Court in illegitimacy cases was approved yesterday by the child welfare legislative committee of the Council of Social Agencies.

The committee also adopted a resolution protesting the action of the House subcommittee in refusing to hold a hearing on the proposed revision of the child labor law to permit children of all ages to appear in theatrical performances.

"We have been fighting this amendment since it was first proposed in 1932, and we certainly think that we are entitled to a hearing on the present amendment, which goes even further than former ones," said Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, chairman of the committee.

Babies Could Appear

Mrs. Ottenberg pointed out that the present amendment would permit children, even babies, to appear at theaters, in night clubs, and other places of amusement at any time of the day or night.

A telegram was sent to the House District Committee asking for a hearing by six organizations, Mrs. Ottenberg said. These are American Association of University Women, D. C. League of Women Voters, Monday Evening Club, League of Women Shoppers, Neighborhood Councils and Council of Social Agencies.

Mrs. Ottenberg said that in former years in addition to the above organizations the amendments had been opposed by the Federation of Women's Clubs, Federation of Churches, Council of Jewish Women, Parent-Teachers Associations and the Federation of Citizens Associations.

The child placement licensing law which was approved by the child welfare legislative committee would set up a board to define standards and issue licenses to agencies engaged in child-placing work.

This board would be composed of lay and professional persons representing the Board of Public Welfare, Health Department and five recognized children's agencies. The work of investigating the agencies applying for licenses would be done by the Board of Public Welfare.

The proposed law also provides for the voluntary relinquishing to a licensed agency of a child by its parent without court appearance. A record of the proceedings would be filed with the Juvenile Court.

Jurisdiction Broadened

The illegitimacy bill approved by committee provides for a preliminary hearing by the Juvenile Court of all illegitimacy complaints, and an investigation by the social service department of the court, during which an attempt would be made to reach a satisfactory, voluntary agreement between the parents.

The father would be permitted voluntarily to acknowledge paternity under the proposed law, whereas under the present law it is mandatory that a warrant for his arrest be issued as soon as the complaint filed.

The jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court in illegitimacy cases is broadened, permitting the court to consider cases involving children residing in the District, but not born here.

This bill also provides for a routine reporting of all illegitimate births by the health officer to the Board of Public Welfare, which shall investigate each case to determine if the welfare of the child is adequately protected.

Herman Vollmer Is Found Dead On Floor by Son

Herman Paul Vollmer, 83, piano tuner, was found dead on the floor of his bedroom late last night at his home, 1331 Webster street northeast. The body was discovered by a son, Charles. Dr. Chester Bradey said that Mr. Vollmer succumbed to a heart attack.

Employed for the past 50 years by E. F. Droop & Sons, music dealers, Mr. Vollmer worked yesterday as usual. He was widely known in the city. A native of Germany, he came to Washington as a young man. Another son, Milton, also survives.

"The thief would never have gotten away with it if the dog had not been chained," ventured Shuler.

Senators and Representatives Among Guests; Archbishop Athenagoras, Diamantopoulos Attend National Banquet of Organization

In tribute to American ideals and traditions and to persons who are making American history, the national banquet of the Order of Ahepa last night brought 850 citizens of Greek descent into the ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel.

With the Most Rev. Spyrou Athenagoras, Archbishop of the Hellenic Orthodox Church of North and South America and Kimon Diamantopoulos, Minister from Greece; three Senators and two Representatives sat at the speakers table with officials of the order.

Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa, remarked that he had "never before had the occasion to see so many Senators and Representatives in one gathering when they knew in advance they couldn't get the floor."

Those who spoke reaffirmed American ideals and the debt this Nation owes to the traditions of Greece.

Representative Celler (Democrat), of New York, proposed that the unused British quota of immigration be redistributed, so as to allow entry by more Greeks and persons from other nations with small quotas.

Citing the traditional tolerance of the Greeks, Celler said he would like to see more of such tolerance in the House and Senate, especially when they are considering legislation pertaining to aliens.

Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, said: "Let us serve notice on alien agitators that if they don't like America, all they have to do is to go back to the countries they came from.

"If they remain here and urge the overthrow of our form of Government, it is clearly the duty of Congress to enact drastic laws to deport them and give their jobs to loyal citizens now walking the streets," Fish declared.

Fish spoke of his investigation of communism about 10 years ago and added that "I never found a Communist of Greek origin in this country."

The new minister from Greece, making his first address in Washington, pointed out ties of friendship between the United States and Greece, and said:

"United by common ideals, by ardent patriotism, both peace-loving, the two nations, the great Republic and small but famous Greece, work today without respite to face an international situation of which you all realize the terrible difficulties."

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, and Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, spoke briefly, urging Ahepa delegates to visit their States in connection with the organization's national convention in Washington State next summer.

V. I. Chebithes, supreme president of the order and the toastmaster, said the organization has no ax to grind and did not seek to put any of its Congressional guests under obligation.

Achilles Catsonis, past supreme president, emphasized that "we are not a front of any kind and we have nothing to conceal."

The Archbishop gave the invocation.

ABC Inquiry Survives Legal Attack

Committee Approves Continuance Today After Rep. Shafer Challenges Rights

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

The House District Committee yesterday prepared to resume two inquiries after a stormy executive session at which the authority of one of the subcommittees was challenged.

Backed by a majority of the committee, the Eberharter subcommittee will resume its investigation of liquor licensing at 10 a. m. today with Ralph A. Lee, restaurant proprietor, whose complaint precipitated the inquiry, recalled to the witness stand.

With local suffrage still the issue, the reorganization subcommittee will hear a long list of civic spokesmen, beginning at 10:30 o'clock, in the House Claims Committee room.

Tax Amendment Signed

Other developments relating to the District yesterday included:

President Roosevelt signed the split-income tax amendment act as a House subcommittee prepared to consider a bill to repeal the law it revised.

The House passed a bill designed to give Federal courts jurisdiction in criminal cases perpetrated on United States reservations, notably George Washington Memorial boulevard.

The Nichols bill to permit appeals to the Commissioners from ABC Board refusals to renew licenses or suspensions under 30 days was reported favorably by the House District Committee.

The House District Committee adopted a resolution asking the zoning commission to grant a new hearing in the Sears, Roebuck & Co. case after hearing a Tenleytown delegation.

The Senate District Committee scheduled its first meeting of the session for 11 a. m. tomorrow.

Complete revision of the District fire and marine insurance law was proposed among a half dozen local bills introduced in the Senate and House.

The House District Committee, at the instigation of Representative Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, prepared to start another row with the House subcommittee on District appropriations over the right of the latter to carry legislation in the local supply bill.

Shafer Attacks Inquiry

Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, challenged the legal right of the Eberharter subcommittee to continue its investigation, it was learned, and questioned the value of testimony taken when witnesses are not under oath.

A demand that Lee be recalled to the witness stand for further questioning about charges he made of liquor license peddling and of solicitation of objections to licenses by members of the ABC Board was made by both Shafer and Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland.

The committee decided not to recall a bill amending the local child labor law to authorize the Board of Education to permit juveniles of any age to appear on the legitimate stage under restrictions as to working hours.

Protests against the committee's action on the bill last week without a hearing were made at the open meeting preceding the executive session by Mrs. M. O. Lorenz, president, and Mrs. Ruth Buchanan, of the Voteless League of Women Voters.

School Funds Start Row

The legislation was defended by A. Julian Brylawski, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, and A. D. Willard, jr., manager of Station WJSV.

Representative Bates challenged the right of the subcommittee on appropriations to make funds available for new school construction that has not been authorized in previous legislation, and demanded the school report on building needs be sent to the full committee.

Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, introduced a bill to exempt from District taxation property of the National Society of Colonial Dames at 2715 Q street northwest.

A companion bill to the measure reported to the House, giving District citizens the right to bring civil suits in the United States District Court against citizens of a State, was introduced by Senator Matthew M. Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia.

Judge Landis Orders Nats to Recall 4 Players

The Washington Post Sports

Springfield Farm Hands Are Involved

Judge Charges Quick, Aderholt, Pitko and Holland Were Not Given Fair Trials

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., March 4.—The Washington Club has run afoul of Baseball Commissioner Landis, who has ordered the Nats to recall four players from their Springfield (Mass.) farm, The Post learned today.

Landis has cracked down on the Nats in the cases of Second Baseman Morris Aderholt, Shortstop Hal Quick, Outfielder Alex Pitko and Pitcher Bill Holland. All four were assigned to the Springfield team during the winter and told not to report to the Nats' camp here.

President Clark Griffith, of the Nats, is now in communication with Landis, who arbitrarily ruled that the players did not have a sufficient tryout with the Washington Club before being returned to the minors.

"I can't understand it," said Griffith. "Landis must not be aware of all of the facts. We had all four of the players in Washington near the end of last season and all of them played in a few games.

"In the case of Aderholt, particularly, Mr. Landis is not aware of the facts. We did not call him in from our minor league clubs last year to protect him from the draft as Landis probably suspects we did in the cases of the others. Aderholt has always been the property of the Washington team, and was not subject to the draft. He was on option with Charlotte last season."

Landis Keeps Promise

Whether Griffith wins his point or not, Landis is apparently putting into action his promise to guard the interests of all players. The commissioner has rebuked club owners for keeping their talent in the minor leagues without a thorough big league trial and thus retarding their advancement.

Aderholt was one of the stars of the Charlotte club last season. A strapping right-handed hitter, he clouted a home run in his first game for the Nats last fall, but in a dozen other games he failed to hit consistently. Quick was impressive in a brief trial at shortstop, but neither Pitko nor Holland figured importantly in the future plans of the Nats.

Manager Harris will send three of his fast-ball pitchers—Sid Hudson, Paul Gehrman and Joe Krakauskas—to the mound for the Nats' opening exhibition game of the season against the New York Giants on Sunday, he announced today.

The Nats' manager has flatly refused the request of Orlando Chamber of Commerce officials that he start the knuckle-ballace, Dutch Leonard, against the Giants.

"I'm running a baseball team, not a sideshow," said Harris, in turning down the Orlando folks. "I don't care if Leonard is our best drawing card. We'll take our own good time with him. Leonard won't pitch until we feel he is ready."

Explains the Reason

Harris explained to the chamber of commerce folks that fast-ball pitchers round into form earlier than the curve-ballers and knucklers, such as Leonard. "There's nothing worse than a curve that doesn't break or can't be controlled. You wouldn't have a ball game, you'd have a track meet. The fast-ballers can take care of the hitters in the spring."

A week ago, Harris announced that young Hudson would be one of his pitching selections, but he held his other choices in abeyance.

"I've got to see what Gehrman looks like under fire," said the Nats' manager. "In practice he looks as if he'd help us, and if he can, the sooner I know about it the better."

Dartmouth Wins To Close Season

Ithaca, N. Y., March 4 (AP).—Dartmouth's basketball team, Eastern Intercollegiate League champion for the third straight year, ended its league campaign tonight by whipping Cornell, 37 to 23. It was Dartmouth's eleventh victory in 12 league games and Cornell's fourth defeat in 11 starts.

Gus (Swede) Broberg of Dartmouth scored 17 points to bring his total for the league season to 180 points, a new record. He established the old mark of 159 last year. Dartmouth also established a team scoring record of 577 points, beating its 1939 mark of 553.

Cornell placed second in the league.

Craig Wood, Billy Burke Victors, 1 Up

Winners Drop Chip Shots on 34 and 35 To Overcome Lead; Demaret, Goggin Out

By the Associated Press

Coral Gables, Fla., March 4.—Ralph Guldahl and Sam Snead, top-heavy favorites to win their second consecutive international four-ball tournament, went reeling out in the quarter-finals today before a remarkable display of golfing by Craig Wood and Billy Burke.

Burke and Wood pulled two magnificent shots out of the bag to come from behind on the last three holes and win the match, one up with a 12-under-par pace for the 36 holes.

That startling upset overshadowed another form reversal in which E. J. (Dutch) Harrison and Clayton Heafner moved into the semifinals with a 4-and-3 victory over fourth seeded Jimmy Demaret and Willie Goggin.

Nelson, McSpaden Bow

Paul Runyan and Horton Smith, the only seeded team left in the running, turned back National Open Champion Byron Nelson and Harold (Jug) McSpaden, 5 and 4.

Dick Metz and Ky Laffoon, the four-ball winners two years ago, moved alng with a 5 and 4 triumph over the Canadian team of Stanley Horne and Jules Huot.

The Wood-Burke combination plays Harrison and Heafner tomorrow with Metz and Laffoon meeting Smith and Runyan.

The day's activities served as sweet retribution for Wood and Burke, who were beaten in a 39-hole match by Guldahl and Snead last year.

Two down at noon principally because of Snead's string of seven consecutive 3s, Burke and Wood kept firing away, but trailed by 3 holes with 7 to go.

Shift Game to High Gear

Then they put their game in high gear. Wood dropped a 15-foot putt for a birdie deuce that won the thirtieth. Burke, National Open king in 1931, whipped his tee shoe within 2 feet of the cup on the 145-yard thirty-second for another win.

It was Wood's turn, so he squared the match by chipping into the cup from 20 feet for a birdie 3 on the thirty-fourth. Burke, finding his second shot 60 feet over the thirty-fifth green, and on an uphill lie, knocked his ball into the can to send his team ahead.

The last hole was a half in birdie 4s and Wood and Burke were home free. Their 18-hole scores were 67 and 63, their afternoon card including 9 birdies.

Smith and Runyan, playing the machine-like golf that has already carried them five times to the finals of this $5,000 tournament, were 11 below par for the 32 holes they played today.

Bowie to Open April 1, Track Official Says

Fire Which Destroyed 5 Barns, Horses Won't Change Scheduled Dates

Fire which leveled five barns and destroyed as many horses last Sunday night will not affect the scheduled opening of the Bowie spring meeting on April 1, Joseph A. Farrell, general manager, said yesterday.

Shipments of horses to the track will continue, he said, and arrangements have been made to take care of horsemen who lost stall space in the blaze. Damage, estimated at $50,000, destroyed 187 stalls, approximately one-fifth of the barn facilities at the track.

Both Laurel and Pimlico officials offered their stall space to Bowie yesterday. Many horses will be stabled at those plants and will be vanned to the track to fill engagements. In addition, the Southern Agricultural Association controls the Marlboro track and several hundred stalls are available there.

"Greek's Kitchen" Goes

The fire wiped out the block of stables situated just beyond the clubhouse turn. In addition to the barns, the "Greek's Kitchen" went up in flames, as did the blacksmith shop. The water tower, ironically empty, and the "Frenchman's Kitchen" were saved. Absence of wind and the fact that rain had fallen for hours held down damage and aided the volunteer firemen from virtually every Prince Georges County department.

An overheated oil stove was believed to have started the fire which began in the corner of the block of stables where the five horses met their death.

List Unchanged

Prince Georges County Police Chief Arthur W. Hepburn and Policemen Sines and Travers yesterday were conducting their own investigation of the possibility that the fire might have been of incendiary origin.

A check-up yesterday failed to add to the early list of thoroughbred casualties. K. D. Kolseth lost Setemup, winner of two races at Bowie last fall, and Lau Tautrie,

Fiorentino Beaten By Scott at Arena

Only 1,000 See 'Revival Show' Staged By Turner; Wild Swing Sends Referee Spinning as Fans Howl

By Al Hailey

It was "homecoming" night for Buddy Scott, Oklahoma-born heavyweight, last night at Turner's Arena, and he celebrated it by outboxing a beefy character who outweighed him some 34 pounds, Philadelphia's Nick Fiorentino, and taking the decision in the 10-round feature attraction.

A somewhat disappointing crowd of 1,000 was on hand to witness Joe Turner's initial attempt to revive the fight business in Washington after a five-month absence.

The night's business had their full approval, however—even when Referee Eddie Lafond took one of Fiorentino's looping swings on the chin and was sent into a form of tailspin in the fifth round.

Buddy, nothing more than an overstuffed light-heavyweight, went into the ring at 178½ pounds on the heavy end of 2-to-1 betting. As the saying goes the 212½-pound Philadelphian was made to order for him.

The former George Washington University athlete coasted through the early rounds and let Nick wear himself out with his wild, roundhouse swings. Buddy was on the receiving end of one of those rights in the second round, however, and was repsectful of their potentency.

Scott Is Hit

Scott's body was raw and ruddy at the end from the punishing blows of Fiorentino, but Nick's face was cut with blood streaming from both nostrils.

It was Buddy's first appearance before a Washington audience in more than two years, and marked his debut as a heavy. Buddy piled up 19 victories here during his campaigning in the local ring. He is studying the probability of making Washington his home again, despite the fact that only $926 was taken at the gate from the cash customers.

After one round of meaningless skirmishing, Fiorentino and Scott settled down to serious business, but it was the former Washington boy, who backed away. The Philadelphian sent two smashing right hands to Scott's jaw, pumped a looping left

Salica, Pace Fight to Draw In Title Bout

Officials Fail to Agree After Furious Battle at Toronto

By the United Press

Toronto, Ontario, March 4.—Lou Salica, of New York, and Georgie Pace, Cleveland Negro, battled 15 rounds tonight for the undisputed bantamweight championship of the world, but they were so evenly matched that their efforts resulted in a draw.

A crowd of 8,500 at Maple Leaf Gardens watched this first title bout to be staged in Toronto in more than ten years as Pace, recognized as champion by the United States National Boxing Association, and Salica, former champ, now recognized by New York State, tried to determine their supremacy.

The fans, who paid $10,000 for the spectacle got their money's worth because it was a furious bout in which the tide of battle seesawed constantly.

Each of the three ring officials voted differently. Referee Billy Burke called it a draw, while Judge F. E. Norbert voted for Page, who had been the 9-to-5 favorite, and Judge L. W. Black balloted for Salica.

Salica's whirlwind finish earned him the deadlock as Pace appeared to tire in the three concluding rounds.

48 Entered In Post-A.A.U. Cage Tourney

25 Unlimited Teams To Battle for Title; Play On Tomorrow

The biggest unlimited class entry in years, 25 teams, plus 15 145-pound class quintets and eight girls' teams were entered in the District A. A. U. basketball tournament last night as entries for The Washington Post-sponsored event closed at midnight.

Tomorrow night's opening schedule will be announced in tomorrow morning's Post. Joe Bertolini, tournament chairman, will meet today with his committee to make the draw.

Three games a night through Saturday, at 7:30, 8:30 and 9:30 o'clock, in Heurich gymnasium, will reduce the total entry of 48 teams in the three classes. First-round play will be continued next week.

The defending champion United Typewriter quintet, currently engaged in a Huerich Amateur League playoff, is the outstanding unlimited quintet entered but they can expect plenty of trouble from Bolling Field, Interior, D. and H., and F. B. I. Two members of Georgetown's undefeated football team, Jules Koshlap and Lou Ghecas, will play for the Georgetown Hoya Hot-shots, another entry.

Fraternity, Government and suburban teams comprise the remainder of the 25 clubs.

Merrick's 1939 champions top the 145-pound class teams while Stewart Brothers combined their 135 and 120-pound class teams into the Stewart Photographers and Stewart Aces. Interior is also represented in the 145-pound class while others backing teams in both classes include Y. M. C. A., J. C. C., and Boys Club, Northeast branch.

With Rockville's girls' team out of the women's class, Treasury will take the favorite's role as they have several members of the Montgomery County team on the roster. Mount Rainier and Hyattsville will comprise the suburban delegation for this year's event.

Mayo, Petro Win Gloves Bouts in N. Y.

New York City, March 4.—Only two Washington amateur fighters seeking places on the All-Eastern Golden Gloves squad in the Coliseum here tonight remained in the running—Danny Petro, in the 112-pound class, and Gilbert Mayo, 126-pounder.

Down to defeat went the Nation's Capital Golden Gloves 175-pound champion, Jim Brady, a Georgetown University student, and Johnny Rogers, 160-pound champion. Jackie Wadsworth, Washington's 118-pound gloves champion, was unable to make the weight and was ruled out of the running.

Petro gave Washington a good start when he outpointed Preston Ferrell, of Newark, N. J., in one of the first matches. More than 100 youthful Gloves champions are seeking the 16 places on the Eastern teams.

Gilbert Mayo, Washington's hard-punching featherweight champion, added another victory by taking decision over William Hurd, of Newark, N. J.

Leo Marcopulos, 135-pound District champion, bowed to Glenn Banfield, of Huntington, W. Va. Billy Kekeris, Washington's 145-pond representative, and heavyweight Jim DeChard did not make the trip to New York.

Brady was defeated by Stan Colez, of New York, and Rogers lost a decision to Vance Beard, of Atlanta, Ga.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., March 4.—That whirring sound you may be hearing in the region of the cemeteries where the old-time ball players are supposedly at peace, presents no mystery, whatsoever. They have simply gotten wind of the proceedings in the Washington camp and are revolving furiously in their mausoleums.

POVICH

Nothing quite like it could have occurred in their day on the diamond when a job on a ball team was something to be guarded jealously and they were gratful for any little thing that they could contribute to the discomfort of an interloper like Buddy Lewis.

But what do we find in the Washington camp? Here, Sammy West, an outfielder by trade, isn't even giving Buddy Lewis a dirty look, and Lewis, mind you, is after one of the same outfield jobs that has always belonged to West. Not only that, but the veteran West is actually tutoring the reformed third baseman, Lewis, in the art of playing the outfield. Zounds!

Even Bucky Harris, only 44 years old, got in on the last end of that rough-and-ready era of the game when the veterans made a rookie about as welcome in camp as a rattlesnake. Help a rookie to make good? Man, are you crazy? That kid is out for your job. Don't give him any encouragement. Run him out of there, and quickly. Heckle him, snub him, make him look bad. Anything to discourage him.

"Baseball has changed," Harris was saying. "I know it when I see Sammy West out there trying to teach Buddy Lewis how to play the outfield. A thing like that couldn't have happened when I broke in and in the days before that it was even tougher, according to what the old-timers tell me. A young fellow had to battle his way into the line-up.

"I had an experience all my own when I first came up with the Tigers in 1916. I was about 18 then and Hughey Jennings told me to report at the Tigers' camp at Waxahachie, Tex. I went down there all excited about a big-league tryout. Humph. I didn't get a look-in. Fellows liks Cobb, Veach, Crawford, Donie Bush and Oscar Vitt were with the Tigers then. I had a little fielding practice, but they never let me get within 20 feet of the plate with a bat in my hand. I was in the Detroit camp for a month and I haven't had batting practice yet. I can still hear 'em saying, 'Outa the way, busher.'"

Harris cheerfully admits that he'd never help any young ball player, or young would-be manager for that matter, to break into a job he was holding himself. "Not even if it were my brother," said Harris. "My unselfishness doesn't extend to that point. In a way, those old timers had the right idea. It wasn't purely selfishness, it was the survival of the fittest.

"Speaking of not helping your brother, I doubt if many people knew that Ty Cobb had a brother in organized baseball. He was a big, blond, right-handed outfielder with Terre Haute in the Central League in 1916 when I was with Muskegon. Cobb was a big star, but it never looked to me as if he had ever given his brother any batting tips. Paul never could hit."

Harris' recital reminds this depratment of a conversation last summer with Harry Heilmann anent Cobb who for a dozen years was Heilmann's teammate at Detroit. "For several years, Cobb hardly had a word to say to me," Heilmann related. "My batting average was beginning to get up there among the leaders and I guess Ty began to resent it. He loved that batting championship, and he wasn't going to risk it by telling me anything that might improve my own hitting. The fact that we were teammates didn't matter.

"Then they made Ty manager of the club to succeed Hughey Jennings. His big idea then was to win the pennant. Then he started to give me some tips about my hitting. I'll say one thing for him: He was a great teacher. The year he became manager, my average went to a new high. But in the years previous when he could have done not only myself but the team a big favor by straightening out the hitch in my batting stroke, he never let on a word."

Harris, incidentally, appreciates in others the unselfishness he admits is not among his own virtues. "Sammy West is simply a grand sort of guy," said Bucky. "I was remarking to him the other day that it would be a great break for the team if somebody could teach Lewis to play the outfield. I wasn't hinting, I was just giving voice to a thought. But the next thing I noticed on the field was West out there showing Lewis how to break for a fly ball, how to charge a ground ball and where to play for the hitters. My hat is off to West."

There are only three outfield jobs on any ball team, incidentally, and on the Washington Club two of the positions have already been clinched by Gerald Walker and George Case. The third is a battle among Lewis, Johnny Welaj and Sammy West. If West succeeds as a teacher, he's very apt to be out of a job with the Nats, but strangely, that doesn't seem to make any difference to him.

Vandy Coach Quits For Job at Temple

RAY MORRISON

Former 'Ringmaster' At S. M. U. Signs a Five-Year Contract

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, March 4.—Ray Morrison, who won nation-wide fame as "ringmaster of Southern Methodist's aerial circus," quit Vanderbilt today to become Temple University's football coach.

Morrison, who taught the Methodists and later Vanderbilt University gridders the wide-open passing game which placed them among the most colorful teams in the game, succeeds Fred H. Swan, who resigned to take the post as assistant to Andy Kerr at Colgate University.

Although university officials declined to disclose Morrison's salary it was authoritatively reported to be at least $10,000 annually. He signed a five-year contract.

Frnka Named Aide

Given the privilege of selecting his line and backfield coaches, Morrison appointed Henry Frnka, his end coach at Vanderbilt, to succeed Charles Winterburn, Temple's backfield coach, who resigned.

Earl Yeomans, Temple's graduate manager, said Morrison probably would not name his line coach until he comes to Philadelphia late this month. He will direct spring practice scheduled to start early in April. The other day Temple bigwigs let it be known their new coach, whoever he might be, would have to hold his own as an after-dinner speaker as well as a coach. They soft-pedaled that angle tonight.

Morrison, who will be the fourth Temple coach in 15 years, admits he isn't much of an after-dinner speaker, but when it comes to winning football games his record speaks for itself.

In 15 years of coaching at Southern Methodist, from 1922 to 1934, and five years at Vanderbilt, 1935 to 1939, his teams have won 131 games, lost 65 and tied 22.

"We hope Morrison will continue his 'aerial circus tactics' as well as his enviable victory record at Temple," Yeomans said. Last year Temple won only two games.

Morrison said:

"I'm leaving Vanderbilt on the friendliest terms with college officials."

On Temple's 1940 schedule are Muhlenberg, Georgetown, Boston College, Michigan State, Penn State,

Columbian Is Seen Either as a Flop Or Great Success

By the Associated Press

New York, March 4.—The Columbian mile, which will climax the regular indoor track season at Madison Square Garden Saturday night, today was subjected to a build-up that forecasts either a terrific race or an equally tremendous flop.

Frank Brennan, the Knights of Columbus games director, announced that:

1—John Borican had been lined up to pace the "big four" to a 3:03 three-quarters.

3—Gene Venzke had made an equally solmn vow to whip the old man in his final Garden mile.

4—Paavo Nurmi and Taisto Maki had agreed that, with a 3:03 pace for three-quarters, the winner—probably Chuck Fenske—should be able to hit 4:08, or dangerously close to it, for the fastest mile ever run anywhere.

Borican, indoor record-holder at three-quarters, 1,000 and 880 yards and 800 meters, told the metropolitan track writers he had been working on the three-quarters under Columbia Coach Carl Merner's direction, and had run it in 3:02, six-tenths of a second faster than the record he set in the Millrose Games.

Well known here and the outstanding playing pro in this section for a number of years, the four-time Maryland Open champion will assume duties at the Landover club this morning.

He has appointed Stanley S. Johnson, sporting goods salesman, as his assistant.

The Beaver Dam job has been open for several weeks. Cliff Spencer, just back off the winter tour, served as pro there for seven years.

Beaver Dam Club members will officially meet the new pro at a buffet supper March 17 that will also honor Mrs. King, recently appointed manager. Houghton will lead a membership drive starting on that

Auerbach, Aranson Also Will Be Lost; Center Duel Looms For Giebel, Comer

Three George Washington seniors, one of them ranking with the school's best all-time players, will close their collegiate careers with the Georgetown game at Tech gym tomorrow night.

Capt. George Garber, for three years a mainstay of Colonial fives and an exceptionally talented ball handler and leader; Reds Auerbach, also a regular, and Mike Aranson, a dependable reserve, are the Colonials who will be playing their last game.

Former schoolboy rivals will be oposed in this game, which is the final of the season for both teams. Joe Comer, who starred for Roosevelt, and Jimmy Giebel, an All-District choice while at St. John's, will be opposing centers. Comer proved unstoppable in George Washington's early season victory over the Hoyas, but he was not guarded by Giebel. The former Johnny flash was on the bench then but since has won a regular position and is expected to be able to shackle Comer.

Georgetown will not be near so hard hit by graduation, Capt. Johnny Schmitt being the only player slated to leave the Hilltop in June.

The Colonials, who boast a current victory over the oHyas, will be decided favorites. Their record is 12 victory over the Hoyas, will be dehas won seven and lost tn.

High scorer of the game was M. Smith, of West Virginia State, who tossed in 12 field goals and 5 free throws for 25 points, one more than was scored by Jim Parker, who paced the Bisons.

Other top scorers were William Giles, of Howard, with 17 points, and Wells and Dixon, of West Virginia State, with 14 and 10, respectively.

Purdue Five Beats Illinois to Win Big Ten Crown

Champaign, Ill., March 4.—A smooth-working Purdue University basketball quintet won undisputed possession of the Big Ten basketball championship by defeating Illinois, 34-31.

Assured of at least a piece of the 1940 championship when they went into the game, the Boilermakers by their victory eliminated any chance they would have to share the title. The winner of tonight's Ohio State-Indiana game would have tied for the title had Illinois won.

The championship, achieved as the season closed for all Big Ten teams, came as a crowning achievement for Coach Ward Lambert, Purdue's graying hardwood genius who has guided the school's basketball destinies for 23 years and is now the dean of Western Conference coaches.

Sophomoric Drop In Form Is State Of Mind, He Says

By the Associated Press

Sarasota, Fla., March 4.—"Phooey! There ain't no such thing as a second year jinx," says Ted Williams.

And with that expressed contempt for baseball tradition, the sensational rookie of last year's Boston Red Sox said he expected to better his mark of 31 home runs this season.

"It's all a state of mind," he declared of the sophomoric drop in form which has plagued many of the major leagues' most promising men. "I'm certainly not worried about any jinx. I'm confident I'll have a better year than I had last season."

To better his last year's record, Williams will have to hit above .327, a mark that in 1939 put him in seventh place among the American League hitters and in the hearts of all Fenway Park fans.

He was just four home runs behind the Veteran Jimmy Foxx, who led the league last season. He was second to Foxx in driving runs across the plate and second to Red Rolfe of the New York Yankees in scoring runs and making two-base hits.

Ted expects shortening of the Red Sox home park rightfield by 21 feet to help him better his home run total this season.

"It's still a long way out there—381 feet—but I believe I could have gotten 5 or 10 more home runs if the bleachers had been moved up last season," he said.

The 21-year-old outfielder who was just two years out of the sandlots when he broke into the Sox line-up said he knew of no particular batting weakness.

Johnnies Meet Purple; Riders Play Tonight

Gonzaga-St. John's Rubber Game Heads Tournament Opening

Three 20-1 shots and the odds-on favorite see action tonight as the eighth annual Metropolitan Schoolboy Basketball tournament gets under way at Tech gym at 7:30.

Roosevelt, the favorite, of course, comes to grips with Montgomery Blair, of Silver Spring, in the opener. In the finale, the third meeting of St. John's and Gonzaga will decide the mythical Catholic Prep title of the city as well as the burning question of who gets into the semifinals of the Metro event.

Though a huge delegation of Silver Spring and Rider fans are expected for the first game, the real gym-packer is expected to be the nightcap. Twice before this season the Johnnies and Gonzaga have packed Tech by themselves. Seats will probably be at a premium before the night is over, a condition reached only a few times this season at the Second street northeast auditorium.

Barring upsets, Roosevelt is expected to take its game by ten points and Gonzaga should romp over St. John's by a like margin. In a midseason game the Riders trampled Blair, 29-21, and there is no reason to doubt they can do it again.

St. John's won the first Catholic Prep clash with Gonzaga, 28-27, but in the return match the Purple came into its own with a 32-23 triumph. Inasmuch as the first outcome was considered quite an upset, Gonzaga should take the "rubber" game and a step upward in this tourney.

Neither of the referees who handled the last game, in which a riot was barely averted, will be in charge tonight. Dallas Shirley and Bernie Lieb will tend the whistles.

Eastern gets its first action against G. W. High, of Alexandria, and Washington-Lee and Bethesda also meet on Thursday. Bethesda is the only club besides Eastern conceded an outside chance of reaching the finals. Semifinals will be staged Saturday night and finals Monday.

Heurich Player Fined for Arguing In Sunday's Game

Ben Kramer, Washington Heurich Brewers guard, yesterday was fined $10 for arguing with Referee Curley White in Sunday's game with the Troy-Celtics which was called off in the final period after the players had been on the verge of several fights.

Whether the game, the first of the American Basketball League playoff series, will be replayed will be decided tonight at a league meeting in New York.

R. E. Donald, business manager who will represent the Brewers at the meeting, last night issued a statement absolving Referee White of any blame for the calling of Sunday's game.

Gene Shields Will Replace Botchey Koch

Temporarily Named Line Coach at G. W. For Spring Work

Gene Shields, an alumnus and former assistant coach of the University of Oregon, has been appointed to succeed temporarily "Botchey" Koch as line coach at George Washington University, Director of Athletics Max Farrington announced last night.

Shields will leave his Portland home immediately to report for the opening of spring practice Monday, Farrington said, and added that it was probable that he would be given a permanent job at the conclusion of this practice sesion.

Naming of Shields to fill the position vacated when Koch resigned to accept a job as line coach at the University of Tulsa was heartily indorsed by Head Coach Bill Reinhart. The two were associate coaches at Oregon for six years. Shields resigned at Oregon two years ago to go in the lumber business with his brother in Portland and the A. W. job marks his return to the coaching game.

Shields was graduated from Oregon in 1925 and the following year was appointed coach of the Commerce High School in Portland. Three years later he became freshman coach of Oregon and in 1931 he was made line coach under the famed Clarence (Doc) Spears. Reinhart was Spears' chief assistant and backfield coach at the time.

Of Shields' appointment Reinhart said last night:

"I think Shields will do just the kind of job we want. His coaching is much like that of Koch's; he can take raw material and mold it into a good line. He has had eight years' experience in the Pacific Coast Conference, which is fast competition. He is well equipped for the job."

Bucking Sets Record Winning Inaugural at Tropical Park

Charlotte Girl Loses By Half Length as Winner Clips Fifth Of Second Off Mark

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., March 4.—Bucking, a 5-year-old gelding flying the "peppermint" silks of Joseph E. Widener, whose successful meeting at Hialeah Park wound up Saturday, captured the featured Coconut Grove purse in new track record time as the Gables Racing Association began a 33-day meeting here this afternoon.

Breaking slowly and working his way to the front in the short stretch, the son of Chance Shot—Buck Up, with Apprentice Merrill Packer handling the reins, lasted to win by a half-length. Paying $16.70 for $2, the Widener representative ran the mile and 70 yards in 1:41 4-5, one-fifth of a second faster than Our Ketcham's former mark.

Gustave King's filly, Charlotte Girl, which began her racing career with a string of triumph in Florida two years ago, was a game-finishing second, another half-length before the favored Bull Whip, which races for Donald P. Ross' Brandwine Stable.

Delightful wether prevailed for the opening day sport and a banner crowd witnessed the eight-race program.

Bull Whip was urged into a narrow early lead by Don Meade. The son of Bull Dog flattered his backers to the top of the stretch, where Bucking looked him in the eye. Bucking gained a length lead at the eighth pole, but Charlotte Girl, spurting in spectacular style, loomed alongside the Widener colorbearer in the last 70 yards. Bull Whip, although tired, stayed close up and the crowd was treated to a rousing finish.

TIME INTERVAL, showing good speed, raced HAPPY NYMPH into defeat in the opening 3 furlongs, then shook off BERWYN and, continuing determinedly, outlasted FIGHT ON. BETTY'S BOBBY moved up stoutly on the outside rounding the lower turn and was second in the final drive. SHIP BISCUIT, well placed early, responded gamely to pressure, but hung in the stretch run. TOWN BOY left the post slowly. He encountered difficulty while trying to slip through on the inside.

BUCKING, slow to find his stride, gained steadily in the last half mile while circling the field and then drew out through the stretch. CHARLOTTE GIRL, outrun in the early stages, responded to strong pressure leaving the backstretch and wore BULL WHIP down. WINNING CHANCE, on the inside all the way, suffered repeated minor interference. CARDINALIS quit in the last eighth mile.

SIXTH MILE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:28½. Off at 4:29. Winner, Mrs. W. T. GAY AMERICAN broke a trifle slowly. He moved into contention rapidly in the open up 3 furlongs, forced his way through on the inside entering the stretch and outlasted BRIGHT AND EARLY, who was the real year game. BRIGHT AND EARLY, eased off the pace in the run down the backstretch, moved up gamely when placed to pressure, but was not equal to the winner at the end. NIGHT TIDE set a swift pace and raced PADDY into defeat. He faltered in the final furlong, yet held the others safe. GHOST QUEEN ran an even race.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $900; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:58. Off at 4:58½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PUMPGUN, $6.20, $4.70, $3.90; MODERN AGE, $10.90, $7.20; LADY INFINITE, $5.40.

PUMPGUN, going in his best form, followed the leaders under steadying restraint until the stretch turn. He assumed command when ready and won in hand. MODERN AGE, rated off the pace for 6 furlongs, closed gamely when placed to pressure early and disposed of LADY INFINITE through the stretch. The latter, prominent from the start, faltered in the last furlong, but was not menaced by the others. SUN MICA had no excuses.

EIGHTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 5:25½. Off at 5:26. Winner, F. H. Two-dollar mutuels paid—AGLOW, $12.60, $6.10, $4.40; FLY ME, $23.30, $11.70; MORCAP $8.90.

AGLOW, under slight restraint the first half mile, took command with a rush and opened up a winning lead rounding the lower turn, but was briskly ridden out while bearing out in the final furlong. FLY ME came through on the inside entering the stretch and outlasted MORCAP. The latter, forced wide rounding the last turn, finished stoutly under punishment. WULFSTAN faltered in the final drive. BLACKMAIL broke slowly and was blocked endeavoring to slip through on the inside.

Selections at Tropical Park

Dear Al—On a morning last August I walked from the town of Marlboro over to the track with a jockey. Naturally, I asked him how he liked his mounts for the day. He said he had a good chance in the second and fourth races, but he thought he could win with his horse in the last race. Lou Machado did not ride that horse in the seventh race. The little gentleman, if there ever was one, was injured in the preceding race and never recovered consciousness. His last-race mount that day was to have been Fying Feet. This mare died in Sunday night's fire at Bowie. "Dynamite" Kerr, Watt Elliott, "Chappie" Chapman and others of the Maryland owners were singing the praises of Harvey McClelland and Frank Boswell yesterday. These fellows are members of the Bowie Volunteer Fire Department, and they put up a game fight against the fire and are credited with saving the barns which housed Dizzy Dame, Playmore and other popular Maryland horses. Horsemen said that the horses did not know they were burned. It was brought out that the five thoroughbreds suffocated before the flames struck them, which was one of the reasons they could not be saved. Everybody around the track agrees that the fire could have been much worse. Well, the entries for the Wireless Windbag Contest continue to pour in. Among the best in the last mail was one from H. T., over Northeast. He pens: "Brown is the guy who his month for miles around; Each Confucious say; Miss Try, oh, boy! morning at eight 'Happy Birthday' he sings (?) and misery to all he quickly brings." I'm giving a badge for the entire Bowie meeting to the reader who sends in the best four-line rhyme on Art Brown, WOL. Only one rule, they must be clean. Send them to Bennings, Washington Post. Confucius say, Miss Troy, oh, boy! BILL.

First Race—Red Burr has run several good races and appears ready to take care of this company. Arcaro will do the riding. Neutrality has been passed along to me as one with speed. Gay Man could be third.

Second Race—Cycle probably needed that last. Tufned in a creditable effort and I look for no mistakes today. Dreel is speedy and favors this oval. Joe D. could be the third one.

Third Race—I'm going to stick to Hard Way in this sprint. The speed merchant has No. 1 position and the kind of speed that goes with it. May forget to stop. Little Bolo has been running consistently. Tipcat for a part of the pay-off.

Fourth Race—John Allen appears to have found the right spot in this test. Arcaro will be in charge of the booting and I'm going to string along. Clocks has been brought along gradually and could be dangerous. Lightweight gives Foxy Maude a chance.

Fifth Race—Royal Blue has done about everything asked in Florida and deserves the top pick in this field. The Calumet entry of Count Morse and Talked About gets in light on both ends. Mar Le for the show.

Sixth Race—Miss Gallant appears the best suited of the 3-year-olds gathered for this distance affair. She will have Donose in the pilot house. Jacinton carries only 105 and is a threat. Totache is better than races show.

Seventh Race—Whiskolo has better than an outside chance to take these in camp. Could be the right one at long odds. Couleedam and Narise will battle it out if it is not the day for the top one.

Eighth Race—Miss Troy could turn back such as these with one of her best efforts. I have reason to believe she will be knocking. Chainwick will be right there if taken off the also eligible list. Lady Sara to complete the money bracket.

Substitute Race—If this event is used, I'll take Dinner Jacket, Cherovan and Ugin.

Bell Telephone Reports Record Year's Revenue

Total of 1.107 Billion Is 54.103 Million Above Previous Year

By the Associated Press

New York, March 4.—The Bell System, the world's largest public utility enterprised, reported today record revenue of $1,107,188,000 for 1939, a gain of $54,530,000 over the previous year. The system includes 9 per cent of the telephones in the United States and 40 per cent of the world total.

American Telephone and Telegraph Co., the top coporation, showed net income of $172,586,539, equal to $9.24 a share on the 18,686,-994 shares of capital stock, compared with $152,428,028, or $8.16 a share, in 1938.

Despite the new peak in gross income of the Bell system, per share profits of the parent enterprise were well below those of the years preceding the 1929 Wall Street crash. The profit in 1929 was $12.67 a share. The 1939 net, however, covered the annual dividend with a small margin to spare.

The investment in the huge telephone plant at the close of 1939 was valued at $4,590,510,000, an increase of $101,432,000 during the year and a rise of $88,500,000 for the past decade.

Construction Expanding

Recalling the decade had brought "unusual problems" for the telephone business which prior to 1930 had registered 60 years of continuous growth, President Walter S. Gifford noted telephone figures again were making records and the system's construction activities were expanding.

"We shall continue our efforts further to improve telephone service and make it more economical for the user," he said.

Telephones in the system increased 775,000, compared with a gain of 430,000 in 1938, maknig another peak at 16,536,000. The report observed the increase in telephones during the decade, which temporarily dented the 60-year growth curve, proportionately was a little less than the Nation's increase in population.

Transatlantic telephone service, formerly routed through England had practically suspended for a time after the outbreak of the war but censorship restrictions, has been rerouted through direct circuits to Italy and the Netherlands, the report said.

The volume on European calls, it was noted, has been restored to about one-half the normal level just before the war.

Brisk Buying Lifts Cotton 55 to 65 Cents

Principal Source of Purchases Apparently From Bombay

By the Associated Press

New York, March 4.—Cotton buyers climbed back on the bandwagon today and boosted prices 11 to 33 points. The forward drive met with little opposition. A last-hour covering movement in March accentuated the scarcity of contracts apparent during the session and final prices were the day's best.

Buying seemed connected more closely to action at Bombay rather than domestic news, since the flare-up of activity in textile centers late last week died down today.

A rally at Bombay after opening easiness came as a surprise for a strike was finally called among cloth workers. Bombay played both sides of the market although buying outweighed selling.

Hedging pressure was slight and offerings on the whole were barely sufficient to contend with moderate demand from trade and foreign accounts.

Cottonseed Oil

A mere flicker of buying was enough to lift cottonseed oil futures 2 to 4 points today. Demand was encouraged mainly by firm lard prices, the advance in hogs and a better undertone in the crude oil market. Sales totaled 44 contracts; May, 7.07 bid; July, 7.16 bid; September, 7.23 bid.

Slightly better demand was reported for crude, with a bid price of 6 cents in the Southeast and Valley and 5¾@5⅞ in Texas.

Wheat Price Gains Wiped Out at Close

Heavier Receipts and Rains Encourage Selling Group

By the Associated Press

Chicago, March 4.—Wheat price gains of a full cent were wiped out before the market closed today and net losses of ⅛-⅝ cent compared with Saturday's final figures were marked up at the end of trading.

Prospects of clearing weather over the Southwestern grain belt and European war news tended to hold selling in check and contributed to strength at times but heavier than seasonal receipts at principal markets weakened the market. Some selling was inspired by weekend rains and reports of generally improved moisture conditions.

Normally receipts of wheat at this time of year before harvest of the new crop would not run large. However, because of the holding policy of producers last summer and during the winter, due to encouragement of the Government loan, poor crop prospects and the war situation, more grain now is finding its way to the market belatedly. Maturity dates on loan wheat are March 31 for 1938 grain and April 30 for 1939 grain. Some of this wheat is being marketed each day although liquidation has diminished since the past week's price downturn.

At the close May wheat was 1.00½-1.00⅝ and July 98⅝-98¼. Corn finished unchanged to ⅜ higher; May, 56⅛-56¼; July, 56¾. Oats unchanged to ⅛ down. Soy beans, 1¼ higher. Rye, ⅛ lower, and lard 5-15 higher.

Government figures showed that in the eight days ended February 23 approximately 2,300,000 bushels of loan wheat were redeemed, bringing the total under loan down to 137,636,000 bushels. Semiofficial estimates Saturday placed the total of 1939 wheat at only 115,000,000 bushels.

Drop Seen Natural Reaction

New York, March 4.—Narrow fluctuations continued in the stock market today with trading dull and throughout the financial district the talk concerns going into the red, trying to hold employes on the pay roll and what can be done if more of the same thing is in store for the business of investing after the November election. The figures on today's market are as uninspiring as those of recent weeks. The composite average advanced a minor fraction of 0.10 point, with some late buying helping the metals, steels and aviations.

Trading amounted to 457,670 shares. If the volume and price changes would be of such small proportions for only a few days at a time, Wall Street would not have its present defeatist attitude. The trouble is the thing keeps up for weeks and months at a time, and in virtually everyone's mind is the knowledge that it is unlikely to change while the ideology, known as the New Deal, remains in control. Opposition to business, the pitting of class against class and concentrated regulation of the field of finance are taking their toll.

While this is going on the chartists continue to draw their lines to represent the trend of stocks, bonds, carloadings and other indices of business and Wall Street firms keep on their pay roll bright young men who have built up a reputation for judging financial factors. And of course everyone who has saved his money and invested it keeps a watch on the earnings of his corporation and also scans the European news for an inkling of how the war will affect him. But underneath it all is the question of whether the country has had enough of experimentation with economic laws, reforms that create new ills as they seek to cure old ones and debts which are so fantastic as to be only numbers to most of us.

Economic Problem

That is why one house, at least, has drawn its partnership agreement to expire on the day after election. That is why a leading partner in another large firm, with wires throughout the country, says his house will liquidate if the election goes the wrong way and that is why other houses have drawn their leases to expire in November. With all the talk about war and business indices, the cold fact remains that November is regarded by many firms as the time when they must decide whether it is worth going on. This may be a defeatist attitude, but it is a fact.

Steels made some headway, possibly on news that demand for heavy products, including structurals, was at better levels. The steel ingot rate dipped for the tenth consecutive week. Steel common just managed to get in the most active division with a gain of ⅞. Bethlehem also gained a large fraction as observers estimated the company is booking quite a bit of business from Uncle Sam in addition to other domestic and export contracts. National Steel was up half a point. The annual report, announced this morning, shows a substantial gain in profit and betterment of financial position.

Seaboard Air Line Active

Seaboard Air Line, which sells for 25 cents a share, easily held the lead in turnover, unchanged in price. Loft lost a fraction on the eve of announcement of its readjustment plan involving distribution of shares of its newly formed candy unit. Aircrafts spurted here and there as the news told of additional contracts and swelling of manufacturers' backlogs. G. L. Martin was a feature, closing at 42, up 1⅛. Curtiss-Wright was active without change in price. Austin Nichols, Coty, American Bosch, Commonwealth & Southern and a number of other low-priced shares were far more prominent on the tape than pivotals. Bulova rose better than a point as directors authorized an extra payment to stockholders. Studebaker was buoyant though less active than usual. The company's 1939 report, out tomorrow, has some good news for shareholders.

Johns-Manville, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Anaconda and Telephone were among old favorites to add a little to their market value. American Can, Goodyear and Sears Roebuck were lower.

Scandinavian bonds made a little more progress on U. S. loan certainties and Treasurys were a bit ahead. The market was unaffected by the Treasury announcement of refunding plans for the $738,000,000 of notes due in June, which came late and was regarded as routine. Cotton firmed 11 to 13 while wheat lost ⅛ to ⅜ cents, possibly because week-end news emphasized that American farms have lost business as a result of the war.

An estimate of January unemployment by the National Industrial Conference Board was taken as a further indication of the business decline which many analysts believe is near the low point. Unemployed totaled 9,296,000, including 2,449,000 on the Federal emergency force in January. This compared with 8,407,000 jobless in December, including 2,331,000 Federal "emergency" workers in December. It was the fourth consecutive month in which WPA, PWA and other agencies have added workers.

Bonds Dull and Irregular

Like other sections of the financial markets, the list bond division celebrated the seventh anniversary of President Roosevelt's accession to power by an unusually dull session. Trading totaled $4,290,000, which is less than half of what used to be considered a moderately active day. Scandinavian bonds developed a little strength, owing to the plan for lending official money far and wide, but the market otherwise was quiet and slightly irregular.

Finland bonds were stationary, but Norwegians moved up a point or two and Danish issues also were in demand. Italians were firm, despite the diplomatic fracas with England, while other neutral country issues were steady. German bonds continued their slow advance, while Australian and Canadian loans drifted downward. Among the Latin-Americans, sharp gains appeared in some of the Uruguays, but others hardly varied.

Speculative railroad bonds tended to advance by minor fractions, but there also were quite a few recessions. The local traction group settled down into a routine, based upon expectation of the price to prevail on the new City Transit 3s. Share privilege bonds were quite as dull as their related equities, and other special groups also were lacking in interest.

United States Treasury obligations advanced by minor fractions, and the preliminary indication on refunding of June notes came too late to affect the market for any issues. Highly rated corporate bonds wobbled a little, here and there, but the price changes were not spectacular.

Virginia Cage Playoffs Start

Presidents, Typhoons Play Tonight

Newport News Five Favored Over G.W.; Winner Will Play Glass for Title

Alexandria, Va., March 4.—Playoffs for the Virginia Class A Conference cage championship get under way here tomorrow night, when George Washington High, winner of the Central District title, meets Newport News High, eastern division titlist, on the G. W. court at 8 o'clock.

E. C. Glass High, of Lynchburg, winner in the western division, was awarded a bye in the first round, and will meet the winner of tomorrow night's contest in the State championship final on Friday night. By virtue of their bye, the Hilltoppers must travel for their only contest, and the championship game will be played either in Alexandria or Newport News, depending on the outcome of the semifinal.

Hard to Compare

There is little basis for comparison of the two semifinalists, inasmuch as they have met only one mutual opponent during the season, but Newport News comes to Alexandria boasting a record definitely superior to that of the Presidents. The Typhoon five has won 15 out of 18 games, losing only to college freshman teams, and was the only one of the sectional winners in the conference to gain its title with an undefeated record.

George Washington annexed the Central District title by winning 9 out of 10 conference engagements, and in general competition has recorded 16 victories against seven defeats. The Presidents' only defeat at the hands of a Virginia rival was administered by John Marshall, of Richmond—a team that was whipped handily in a return game ten days ago.

Successful promoter of the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. Open last year and also of several other golf tournaments in the city over a span of years, including the National Capital Open, Houghton has promised the club officials a full schedule this season.

He resigned as auto salesman for a Bethesda company and will devote his full time to the club. Houghton's last golf post was with the Chamberlin Club at Old Point Comfort, Va. He started his pro career at Kenwood and later served in an executive capacity at Capital and Indian Spring, as well as teaching pro in the sports section of a local department store.

Beaver Dam officials are in the midst of preparations for the biggest season in years, and the appointment of Houghton is in line with a rebuilding job in the golf course and interior improvements.

Houghton will confine his golf to local affairs and possibly the major national tournaments.

He is still the only golfer ever to compete in the four national championships, the open, amateur, public links and P. G. A.

Cliff Spencer Has Several Job Prospects

With professional golf jobs in this section changing hands every week or two, Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam professional until last month, announced yesterday he had several things in mind and may land a berth near here.

Winner of the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. championship last fall and former Maryland Open champ, Spencer had little to say about his recent venture with the big-time pros on the winter tour except every round was ruined by one or two bad holes. He had sever.' par nines but couldn't put them together.

Reinbold Is Named Army Court Captain

West Point, N. Y., March 4 (AP).—Cadet Richard D. Reinbold, of Newark, Ohio, sophomore forward who paced Army's basketball team to a suecessful season, has been elected captain of next season's team. He also was captain of the Newark High School team in 1935.

Baer-Galento Fight Scheduled May 28

New York, March 4 (AP).—Mike Jacobs, head of the Twentieth Century Sporting Club, today set Tuesday, May 28, as the date for the Max Baer-Tony Galento heavyweight fight. The site will be the Jersey City baseball park.

NATS' ROOKIE PARADE

At Orlando Camp

(This is another of a series of sketches on the rookies seeking jobs with the Nats at their Orlando training camp.)

JACK BYRAM, Pitcher.

In the spring of '39, this young man's fancy lightly turned to thoughts of baseball and he blithely hitch-hiked from Blair Academy, in Blairstown, N. J., to the training camp of the Charlotte, N. C., Club and asked for a try-out.

JACK BYRAM

His entire pitching background was comprised of his sandlot experiences and two years duty on the mound for his prep school team, but Washington scouts scented sufficient talent in his right arm to sign him to a contract with Shelby, in the Class D Tarheel League.

This son of a New Jersey cemetery superintendent didn't do badly with the fourth-place Shelby Club, winning 11 and losing 11. On the strength of that showing, he's down in the Washington training camp this spring, tabbed as a prospect.

He looks like what he is—a prep school kid who might be 17 instead of the 20 years he owns up to. He's a blushing 6-footer weighing 175 pounds and the manner in which he rears back and throws his fast ball is the thing the Washington bosses like about him.

They aren't bothering much with his curve. His fast ball is his forte, and control is his chief aim in the Nats' camp. Until he changed his pitching style at Shelby last year and discovered that his control had vanished, he had won seven games impressively and lost only three.

There isn't any agitation in Orlando for retaining Bryam with the Nats this season. He is already ticketed for the Nats' Orlando Club and another tryout with Washington if his record in the Florida League warrants it. Jack Byram is one of the score of under-done rookie pitchers the Washington system is trying to develop.

and Gehrman. He is intrigued by Hudson's 24 wins in the Florida State League last season and has been impressed also with the stylish delivery of the tall right-handed rookie.

The portly Gehrman has been working furiously to divest himself of 15 surplus pounds and his pitching delivery betokens power. Harris is eager to discover if the big right-hander the Nats bought from Birmingham is still troubled with the lack of control that harried him last season.

Krakauskas, who reported here with the first batch of players on February 15, is the most advanced pitcher on the club and from him Harris expects the best performance. The bow-legged southpaw has been in the Nats' camp for four years but for the first time he is displaying some control over his fast ball.

Three hundred Orlando citizens and tourists watched with enrapt attention today as the Nats' infield swung into high gear for 15 minutes before the morning practice of the regulars was brought to a halt.

The infield was comprised mostly of three guys named Jim—Jimmy Wasdell at first, Jimmy Bloodworth at second, and Jimmy Pofahl at shortstop. At third base was Cecil Travis and the quartet put on a fancy display of handling the ball as Coach Milan slugged it to all parts of the infield.

Cody Resigns Florida Berth

Gainesville, Fla., March 4 (AP).—Josh Cody, athletic director and head football coach at the University of Florida since February, 1936, resigned today.

He declined to discuss his future plans or to comment on a report he would become an assistant to Coach Ray Morrison at Temple.

Morrison quit Vanderbilt University today to go to Temple. Cody, a former star tackle at Vanderbilt, was line coach there before coming to Florida.

Cody handed his resignation, effective April 1, to President John J. Tigert who accepted it but said he was in no position to discuss a successor.

Cody's three-year contract with Florida would not have expired until December 31.

into the body and Scott hung on briefly.

Buddy stepped back, however, and planted a perfectly timed right to the jaw of the bulbous Philadelphian. He followed it with a left to Nick's jaw.

Fathoming Nick's wide open style of fighting, Scott kept away from the dangerous looping rights and left-hand punches and contented himself with shooting left jabs into the nose of the Philadelphian that drew blood before the third round was very old. He caught Nick off balance with a right and had him against the ropes as the bell rang.

Biggest surprise of the night came in the eight-round semifinal in which Marcus Pitts, local featherweight, unleashed a whirlwind attack a la Steve Mamakos and took a majority decision over a highly favored Bobby (Poison) Ivy, 126½, so-called "featherweight champion" of New England.

Referee Warns Moth

Bobby's "poison" was sadly lacking. He landed only a negligible number of good blows, while Pitts kept a steady left jab shooting in that opened a bothersome gash under Bobby's right eye. It was a roughhouse affair, with both boys wrestling and butting and being warned by the referee for same.

Mayon Padlo, 144, of Philadelphia, scored a big hit with the fans when he pounded out a six-round decision over a game but outclassed Eddie Finazzo, 148¾.

They made it a bruising battle from the first bell, with Padlo, Fiorentino's stablemat, flicking a left jab with a mule kick in it into the face and body of Finazzo. Twice Eddie went down for counts of nine in the fifth round from the sting of Padlo's left. He was reeling and dizzy, but Padlo let up in the next round and coasted to victory. Eddie got in a wild right that made Padlo's knees buckle in the second round but he could do little more.

Al Gilbert, 165, of Washington, and Eddie Miller, 162, of Baltimore, fought to a six-round draw. There were no knockdowns, but both boys ended up with nasty gashes over the eyes.

his pitching arm in the March 17 all-star game at Tampa that he said today he would appeal against using the Iowa youth more than one inning.

"That will be much too early to ask Feller to bear down the way he naturally would in a game of that kind," declared Vitt. "I asked Bob how he felt about it, and he said he thought one inning would be his limit."

The Indians' pilot said his fear that Feller might be called upon for more than one inning is based on the fact that the other five American Leaguers are all older hands who traditionally require longer to get into form.

Avalon, Calif., March 4 (AP).—Manager Gabby Hartnett, of the Chicago Cubs, readying himself for his nineteenth season in the majors, said today he hoped to be behind the plate when his club opens the campaign next month. After that, however, Al Todd will do the bulk of the backstopping and rank as the No. 1 Cub receiver, Hartness said.

Pasadena, Calif., March 4 (AP).—Much as Manager Jimmy Dykes would like to see his Chicago White Sox beat the Chicago Cubs in their exhibition tour beginning March 14, he's going to risk taking a trimming in favor of testing his rookies under fire.

Bob Kennedy, young third baseman, will be tried regularly at the hot corner, Dykes said, with Johnny Webb working at shortstop and Don Kolloway at second.

Tampa, Fla., March 4 (AP).—For the first time in three years, rain washed out a drill session for the National League champion Reds today.

An all-night downpour made the field too soggy for morning work, but under a hot afternoon sun three infield crews cavorted through routine pepper-ball and later took turns at the plate. Long-range honors went to Frank McCormick and his unrelated "namesake," Mike.

First "game" of the season is scheduled tomorrow, between regulars and a yannigan nine—and there is prospect of a double-header if Manager Bill McKechnie can string together four full teams.

Lakeland, Fla., March 4 (AP).—Manager Del Baker, of the Detroit Tigers, found new hope for his club today in the pitching of Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe.

The big right-hander was out with an arm ailment most of 1937 and 1938 and won ten games and lost 12 last season.

What pleased Baker today was the fact that Rowe was using a full swing.

"He started to do that late last season," Baker said. "I'm glad to see him continue it because it convinces me that he has lost all fear of arm trouble."

Arrival today of Second Baseman Charley Gehringer and Outfielders Bruce Campbell and Earl Averill brought the Detroit squad to full strength.

San Antonio, Tex., March 4 (AP). Rip Radcliffe, outfielder obtained from the Chicago White Sox in a winter trade, was on hand for the St. Louis Browns' first squad workout today, leaving only Harlond Clift, Don Heffner, Myril Hoag and Joe Glenn among the absentees.

Manager Fred Haney put the men through a long batting stretch and the younger infielders were drilled in picking up grounders.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 4 (AP).—Manager Ray Blades directed his big St. Louis Cardinal squad in a brisk workout today, then observed that only Johnny Mize and Jimmy Brown could be classified as "sure starters."

He said he will not look critically at any of his players until they've had a good chance to iron out muscular kinks.

Blades was especially pleased with the way Joe Orengo and Martin Marion, youthful shortstops, were laboring to overcome batting faults. "Gosh, if that boy can learn to hit," Blades commented as he watched Marion try a new stance.

Clearwater, Fla., March 4 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers held their first nine-inning game of the training season today and the team led by Coach Chuck Dressen defeated Manager Leo Durocher's squad, 18 to 5. Sam Nahem, a Brooklyn boy, who pitched for Nashville last year, was the victim of most of the scoring. Nineteen batters faced him in one inning and Pete Coscarart made three appearances at the plate.

Anaheim, Calif., March 4 (AP).—Connie Mack sent his Philadelphia Athletics through their longest spring training drill today. The session consisted of hitting and field practice, pepper games and fly shagging, and a long drill for pitchers in fielding bunts, covering first base on grounders along the right-field line and holding runners to their bases.

Mack said he thought "everybody looked pretty good" in the A's 6-to-3 triumph over Seattle yesterday.

Miami Beach, Fla., March 4 (AP).—Morris Arnovich, one of the National League's leading hitters in 1939, showed up at the Phillies' training camp today, 24 hours ahead of schedule. He reported in the tip of condition.

Manager Bill Terry, of the Giants, conferred with President Gerry Nugent, of the Phils, and later declared he had failed in an effort to obtain Pitcher Kirby Higbie, of the Phils, in a trade. Nugent declined comment.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 4 (AP). Outfielders Tommy Henrich, Mike Chartak and Bill Matheson and (Firstbaseman Babe Dahlgren reported to the New York Yankees today and Manager Joe McCarthy received word that Red Ruffing, righthand pitching ace, had signed his contract and would leave his home at Long Beach, Calif., immediately.

Jewish Leaders Protest British Discrimination

Policy in Palestine Denounced by Group Through Embassy

Through the British Embassy here a delegation of Jewish leaders yesterday presented a protest against England's new policy in Palestine "providing for government control and restriction of the sale of land by the Arab citizens of Palestine."

The memorandum was presented by Dr. Solomon Goldman, president of the Zionist Organization of America, and Dr. Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress. They expressed the delegation's "deep regret" at the necessity for making such a protest when the Allies are "engaged in a heroic struggle for the defeat of Hitlerism."

They contended, however, that the new regulations were discriminatory and tended to impair the rights of Jews guaranteed under the mandate by which Britain governed Palestine. The regulations, they said, introduced into Palestine for the first time racial discrimination and confined the Jews to a new "pale of settlement, thereby denying equality before the law.

These new regulations, they said, are contrary to the conclusions of the Permanent Mandates Commission of the League of Nations in its thirty-sixth session when it considered the White Paper of May 17, 1939, that included the main features the regulations are designed to implement.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

This question concerns today's hand reported by John C. Stablein, of Seattle, Wash. In discussing it, he says, "After a player has graduated from the novice class he begins to realize that there are other ways to take tricks besides ruffing losers in dummy, or winning with high cards. He may fall so much in love with this discovery that he forgets the possibilities in the primary method of winning tricks. In an important team-of-four match the result hinged on this deal."

Answers

Declarer should play low from dummy on the opening lead of the heart seven, ruffing in his hand. Then lead a low spade toward the board. West ducks (it would not help to go up). Another low heart is ruffed in South, then the trump ace is played. Dummy is re-entered with a high diamond and the spade queen is played. No defense can now prevent victory, as dummy's losing diamond can be ditched on the club king

This is admittedly a tough hand and one that any player can be forgiven for muffing. But it may be noted that it is made by the primary method of taking tricks—three spades, two heart ruffs and seven high-card tricks. In addition to the ability to count to twelve, it is necessary for declarer to recognize that the dummy is the master hand.

Listen! with Slocum

This evening, come 9:30, the Columbia Broadcasting System's crack writers and actors will roll the highlights of seven years in Washington into a half hour radio program that should engender some fond memories around this town.

GODFREY

The occasion for the flashbacks will be the network's Nationwide salute to WJSV upon the occasion of that station going to 50,000 watts, a subject I believe I mentioned in a recent column. It is barely conceivable, even from this angle, that our going to 50,000 watts will have no serious effect upon your blood pressure, but if the events up on the Hill and over at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue have had you'll want to hear this program.

In addition to the dramatized history there will be a few scenes from the life of WJSV, rehashings of old campaigns and such, that helped Washington and gained friends for Columbia's station for the Nation's Capital.

The essential element of personality will not be overlooked. Bob Trout, who started a pretty gaudy radio career here at WJSV, will be heard from New York along with Warren Sweeney and Larry Elliott and couple of other ex-Washingtonians. Kate Smith, who is doing pretty well these days, but had her unhappy moments here in her home town, will also take part.

The Washington end of the program will include Arthur Godfrey, Arch McDonald and Elder Michaux. Many years ago Washington's funny man, Mr. Godfrey, did a broadcast that is still a classic and which contained nary a laugh. In fact it was the most somber broadcast in the history of radio. If you remember it there is no point in telling you about it; if you don't, tune in tomorrow at 9:30 and here Godfrey repeat it. McDonald will tell about the shoe campaigns WJSV has run in the past and the Elder's "Happy Am I" singers will do a bit of their famed specialty.

"I Take This Man"

BY ANNE TEDLOCK BROOKS

Chapter 19

A CHILD! Brenda had gone through all of that alone. As the morning passed, he berated himself for having been a fool. "If I'd only given her a chance to talk! But I was like an insane person," he railed at himself.

They reached Paramaribo just before noon. As the boat swung into harbor a government launch went out to meet it. Alan had made his farewells quietly. He had written a brief note to Margot and was glad that she had not appeared from her cabin yet.

He went to shore in the launch. It was late in the evening before he could get passage from the port.

When he reached Rio, he went directly to his rooms at the club. On the table was the letter from Brenda. He recognized the small oblique handwriting the moment his eyes fell upon it. His fingers shook as they opened it. His eyes devoured it greedily.

Divorce

Divorce! The blow of the word smashed through Alan's consciousness.

He turned the letter over and over. He reread it. Not a word had she said about the baby. If Margot had lied. . . . But then, she had no occasion for lying to him! She did not dream that he hadn't known.

Alan called for a reservation on the first transport plane. He could fly directly to New York, he discovered, if he were at the airport in an hour's time.

He was ready sooner than that and waited impatiently while the passengers were checked in. Never had he felt this suspense of getting off before.

While he was on the plane he read his other mail. There was an accumulation of it. A letter from his sister Pixie, and one from Senor Cruze. He opened the official looking envelope first. He read it quickly. Then he gasped and reread it. Cruze was making him an offer to handle his supplies in Rio. That would be a decided change from his old work. He frowned at the letter. There would be no more expeditions such as he had made twice in the last 14 months. It would mean he would have complete supervision of the Rio office. There would be trips to the mines, of course, but all of that would be by plane. The salary was approximately the same.

Alan thought regretfully, if only that had come to me 15 months ago! Then a sickening nostalgia for the sight of Brenda struck him.

He opened Pixie's letter. He supposed that she would fill it with news of gay social events. But it was not true.

Pixie came directly to the point. Although he never mentioned the letter later, he would feel always that he owed a great deal to Pixie, because, although she had not understood all of the situation, she brought to him clearly the change that had come about in Brenda. She wrote rapturously of the baby, and Alan felt a great desire to see him.

The Doorbell Rings

Brenda had settled herself with the baby in her lap when the doorbell rang. It was Sunday morning and she had slept late. She was wearing a rose-colored house robe, and her black hair lay in ripples about her shoulders.

Marta answered the bell. Brenda heard her exclamation. Then she heard quick footsteps crossing the little hall, the living room and coming toward the room.

Brenda stood up quickly, holding Alan, jr., close. And that was the way Alan found her. They made a picture that he carried in his heart the rest of his life.

Alan touched the baby's hand.

"Brenda, darling, I am so sorry. Will you ever be able to forgive me? I was mad. I never guessed——"

"Alan," she said gently, "I tried to tell you so much, but you would not let yourself listen. And afterward I wrote you, but the letter was returned. I could not tell you about the baby after that." Her eyes were still and Alan could see the suffering they held.

His throat was dry and his words harsh. "I can never undo the wrong, Brenda. All I ask is your forgiveness. Our baby! Oh, Brenda!" His voice choked.

Brenda watched him while he looked down upon his son. The baby gurgled and kicked his small heels against her breast. Then she placed him in his carriage nearby.

Alan watched her hungrily. He had known the lines of her slender body, but they, having known a woman's lot, were now more beautiful.

Alan Reads Her Letters

"Alan, there is so much to explain. Instead of telling you, will you read my letters I wrote before you came? They will tell you everything." Brenda had not kissed him.

She crossed the room and opened the desk. She withdrew the letters she had written. There was the first one, the night of her return. The second letter he must know was her plea to him now. In reading it, he would learn that she loved him deeply and that for Cary she had found her original feeling of sincere friendship.

She stood before him, the letters in her hands.

She said, her voice low: 'Alan, what of you and Margot? Did you get my letter about the divorce?"

"Yes, and I had to come and see if that is what you really wanted, Brenda. I was on my way to you before it came. Believe me, I started before I knew about our baby, as soon as I learned that Cary and Lynne were reconciled."

She looked at him anxiously. "You did that, Alan, thinking I still cared for him?"

"Of course, Brenda. Even before I knew about the baby I had decided to come. Margot inadvertently told me about everything. I had not known anything about it all."

"But what of Margot?"

"Brenda, please forget that she ever existed. For me, she did not. I could never forget you. I love you more deeply than is humanly possible. If you can only care a little, I——"

The tears rushed to her eyes. She moved toward the door. "Read my letters, Alan. They will tell you."

She left him alone with them. She went into the living room and sat stiffly upright on the divan. She could hear Marta moving about quickly in the kitchen, and presently she could smell the odor of a spice cake that Marta knew was Alan's favorite.

Love Is Reborn

Alan came quickly into the room. His eyes were lit with happiness. He picked Brenda up in his arms and held her close to him. They needed no other explanations. All of the misunderstanding, the grief of their lonely days was behind them.

She clung to him hungrily. Alan closed her eyes gently and rubbed her white forehead. It was the Alan of old, and Brenda's heart beat against his.

Once they tiptoed in to look at the baby, who had gone to sleep, one pink fist outside the coverlet. Alan rolled his carriage into the nursery. He looked about it curiously. It was so like Brenda to decorate it with all of the Mother Goose characters. He could see another small room in the apartment back in Rio. It would make a good nursery, too.

Marta found them busy over their plans when she came to call them in to dinner. Brenda was flushed and smiling and Alan's face had lost its haggard look.

"Will you go with us, Marta?" Alan asked after dinner.

Marta smiled shyly. In her slow way, she said: "You are my family. I will go."

In the afternoon, they drove out to see Alan's family, taking the baby. The reunion was the happiest that Pixie could remember. She whispered once to Alan: "Did you get a certain communication?"

"I certainly did! Oh, Pixie, I'm grateful!"

They stayed on a week longer at the apartment, then they went on board the ship that was to carry them back to Rio.

Brenda's voice had regained its old lilt, her eyes their deep gleam and her whole being radiated happiness.

On their last night out, Brenda and Alan stayed on the deck late. It was a beautiful night, the water was calm and the moon sent down a shaft of golden light to make a path from heaven to earth.

"Are you happy, Brenda?"

"So happy that I'm almost afraid."

"You need never be afraid again," Alan smiled at her. Presently he said, "There's something that I've wanted to discuss with you, but I didn't want to bring up anything of a business nature."

Happiness Ahead

Brenda turned against his shoulder so that she could see his face. "What is it?"

Alan took out the letter from Senor Cruze. He touched it and told Brenda of the offer. "It will mean there will no more long trips into the mining regions. It will mean that you won't have to be alone."

"But is that what you want? Will that mean so much to you?" Brenda looked up into his face. "Alan, I want you to be happy in your work."

"Once upon a time I thought that nothing could ever make me want to give it up. Now I am just as sure that this is what I want to do!"

"Alan," she said softly after a while, "just one thing, can we go back to Mese Vorhae some day?"

"Yes," Alan whispered. His arms held her closer. He could see the room they had occupied, the moonlight streaming in to touch Brenda's face. "Yes," he said again. "To Mese Vorhae." There once more they would pledge their love—a complete love.

67 Tickets For Parking Are Adjusted

Rep. Anderson Listed in Warnings And Cancellations

Representative C. Arthur Anderson (Democrat), of Missouri, was among the 67 persons whose parking tickets were "adjusted" by police last week. He was excused with a "warning" by order of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police.

Anderson's name was listed in the weekly report ordered by the Commissioners. Of the 67, 12 had their tickets canceled outright and 55 received warnings.

Two drivers received warnings because they were "unavoidably detained," four had their tickets canceled through diplomatic immunity, and one man was excused with the notation: "Not employed for eight months; previous good record."

4 Say Cars Were Pushed

Four violators pleaded successfully that their cars were pushed after they parked, five were excused because they were strangers in the city, and three because they were Government employes on official business.

Seven persons said they had parked momentarily, six had previous good records and nine were making emergency calls. Four were excused because the violation was unintentional and four because they were ill.

Those released because of diplomatic immunity were George S. Depasta, of the Greek Legation; Meredith S. Watts, of the Polish Embassy; Alexander I. Forrest, of the Danish Legation, and Margaret J. Zeeveld, of the Japanese Legation.

Robb L. Norvelle, of 4926 Westway drive, was pardoned for parking overtime when he pleaded that he locked his keys in his car by mistake and had to return home for a duplicate set.

Those on official business were Sumner E. Smith, of 3945 Connecticut avenue northwest, a Government engineer who was repairing a broken water pump; Marion H. Lynn, of 5734 First street northwest, an inspector for the highway department, and Joseph J. LaSalle, of 638 Rock Creek Church road northwest.

Those who were "unavoidably detained" were Noble Johnson, of 2101 New Hampshire avenue northwest, and Raymond M. Grinder, of 410 A street northeast.

Interneship Is Proposed For Druggists

Pharmacists Have Lost Craft Consciousness, Conference Is Told

Baltimore, March 4.—Extension of "drug store interneship" plan to train young pharmacists was urged today at the annual convention of the boards and colleges of pharmacy of district No. 2.

New Jersey now requires this "internship of pharmacy students graduated from regular pharmacy college courses," explained John J. Debus, member of the New Jersey Board of Pharmacists.

Debus warned that pharmacy is rapidly changing from a professional to a commercial vocation.

"Pharmacists have lost their craft consciousness, and it must be reestablished if drug stores want to take their rightful place as professional stores," he said.

Druggists from New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, Virginia and West Virginia attended the conference.

Congressmen's Wives Inspect Mysteries of Patent Office

Members of Congressional Club Are Received by Commissioner Coe, Who Describes Process, Legal Points

The mysteries of the Patent Office, how it works and why, were revealed yesterday afternoon to 25 Congressmen's wives, members of the Congressional Club.

The women arrived rather excitedly 20 minutes before closing time, a little late for their appointment because they had seen too much at the Census Bureau.

Marching up the long corridor of the Commerce Department Building, they were received by Patent Commissioner Conway P. Coe, and given mimeographed papers describing the history and functions of the Patent Office.

Commissioner Coe described the procedure of granting patents to the first inventor instead of the first applicant in each case, and the lawsuits that arise out of patent applications and infringements.

"I am the most sued man in the District of Columbia," he said. The ladies laughed. They were a little bothered at the thought of so many lawsuits involved in protecting patent rights, but Commissioner Coe explained that all rights are like that.

At 4 o'clock, when the offices were closed and the building was empty, Chief Clerk J. M. Brearley led the ladies to the scientific law library, where copies of every patent granted are kept.

There are 2,180,000 United States patents and about 5,000,000 foreign patents on file, Commissioner Coe explained. These have to be searched to prove the novelty of each application.

The ladies looked at the books lining the walls of the reading room, and the thousands of brooks in the stacks.

"I'm glad I don't have to read all these books," said one.

A Commerce Department attache explained that the air is washed to prevent oxidation of the paper. Brearley said that the existence of a foreign patent prevents an American inventor from patenting the same device.

Mrs. J. R. Murdock, wife of the Democratic Representative from Arizona, was the leader of the ladies.

Boy, 14, Killed, 15 Injured On School Bus

Child Victims Strewn Along Road; Truck Driver Arrested

By the Associated Press

Dover, Del., March 4.—A boy of 14 was killed and at least 15 other children were injured today in a highway collision that ripped a school bus apart and left the victims strewn along the road.

State police said the bus was rammed by a truck as it stopped on the duPont highway, 2 miles north of here, to pick up pupils. Twenty-five were aboard, bound for Dover schools. The dead boy was Elwood Williams, of Cheswold.

The impact ripped the body of the truck from the chassis. It skidded 10 feet into a ditch, with some of the children still clinging to their seats. Others were hurled to the ground; their shoes torn off and their clothing ripped.

The younger children wept and screamed, shivering from fright and cold. Some lay unconscious on the highway but a few got up and wandered. Later they were taken to a hospital in police and private automobiles.

The truck driver, booked as Philip R. Christian, 25, of Buckroe, Va., was arrested on reckless driving charges. He was injured slightly. W. S. Scarborough, 66, of Cheswold, the bus driver, was not hurt.

Lewis Yancey Funeral Today; Flew to Rome

The funeral for Lewis A. Yancey, 44, aviator who made a transatlantic flight to Rome in 1929, will be at 3 p. m. today at Fort Myer Chapel. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery. He died Saturday at his home in Yonkers, N. Y.

A native of Chicago, Mr. Yancey served in the Navy 13 years. On his flight to Rome with Roger Q. Williams he flew from Old Orchard, Me., non-stop to Santander, Spain, in 31½ hours. He was believed the only flier ever to have looped an autogiro.

Mr. Yancey returned to this country last year from New Guinea, where he was navigator for Richard Archbold, explorer.

One Dies of Traffic Hurts, Four Others Struck on Streets

One man died of traffic injuries and four persons were hurt on Washington streets yesterday while police pointed to a February record well below that of last year.

Abner Berry, colored, 40, of Trenton, N. J., died at Casualty Hospital of injuries received February 27 in a crash on Baltimore boulevard near Beltsville.

Struck by an automobile at Massachusetts avenue and Eighth street northeast, Marilyn Hall, 6, of 1224 D street northeast, was in Casualty Hospital with injuries of shoulder and head. Police said the automobile was driven by Frank J. Burns, 48, of 1354 East Capitol street.

William Coates, colored, 8, of 1021 New Jersey avenue southeast, was in serious condition at Casualty with internal injuries after being run over by a truck in front of St. Vincent de Paul School, I street between Second and Third streets southwest, at recess. Police charged Russell G. Schuck, 34, of 463 H street southwest, with disobeying an official sign.

At Emergency Hospital Col. Frederick L. Huidekoper, 66, of 1868 Columbia road, writer on military subjects, was in serious condition. He was struck by a street car Sunday night at Connecticut avenue and S street northwest.

Police last night were investigating serious head injuries of an unidentified white man, about 30, foundlying by the side of Edmonston road at Burch street, in North Decatur Heights, Md.

The man, believed to be the victim of a hit-run driver, was rushed to Casualty Hospital by the Bladensburg Rescue Squad. Physicians said he had suffered a cerebral hemhorrage.

Ethel B. Hodges, 74, of 4115 Wisconsin avenue northwest, suffered head injuries when she was struck down in front of her home by a car police said was operated by Jasper Rogers, 37, of 2403 Pennsylvania avenue northwest. She was treated at Sibley Hospital.

Four less persons were killed here in February than in the same period last year, police records showed. Five persons met death in auto crashes last month and 9 in February, 1939.

The year's total traffic fatality record shows 10 dead since January 1, as compared to 17 at this time last year. Although accidents increased by nearly 100 over February, 1939, the number of persons injured dropped from 292 to 247. There were 910 accidents last month as against 819 for the period last year.

"If we can convince the driving and walking public that we can't do the job alone and need their co-operation," said Inspector William E. Holmes, police traffic supervisor, "our month-by-month record will continue to show improvement."
